PRINTED DAILY, MY P. MOCACO. NEW-ORLE 1"4, HONDAY, JANUARY 98, 1898

[Proper the New-Bork Asp. noon.] THE MEET PRESIDENT .- LOTTER VILL Policy-Litizens. -- We have a rule of aw, that he who prosecutes a claim must go into court with the burden the proof upon his own thoulders. s a rule of general good souse, applicable as well the political, as to civil chi mants; to the candidate for promotion n the humble silitor that waits at the door of remedial justice. If private grievances are only redressed upon cause shown, surely the powers, distinctions and emoluments of office, ought not to be attribable on easier terms; The Friends of General Jackson knowing -for every body knows-the proper rule of the case, have ushered him before the tribunal of the nation, furnished, it is fair to presumer with all the proofs, strong of weak, pertinent or impertinent, genuine or spurious, that could possibly be mustered for his use. Let us open the budget, and see wha

The particulars deserving notice are the vote conformed upon the General by the late electoral Colleges, whereby it is said to be already resolved, that he is the choice of the country;—the affability of his manners, whence some persons have reasoned, with a sort of rapture. to the warmth and goodness of his heart; his alleged refusal to bargain for the chief magistracy, a fact continually and vehemently urged, as showing the incomparable extength & fortifule of his integrity; and, last of all, though certainly not east, the story of his military performances, constituting confessedly the main reliance of his reputation for ta lests, and of his supposed title to the rewards and honours of political employ- ty to declaim in every form of dispament. These are the prominent feasu- regement. Nor is this verprising; but res of the evidence in his favorities exnote 1 25. Les paqueus de 10 biliets, so hibited by his own advacates, findered principle. Shall the citizen reply aexcepting these, it is not easy, amid all the turnic praises and Seclamations with which the ingentify of party zeal has > or small, that his either the shape or clour of evidence. Are year batished my friends? Do you think the evidence sufficient? Is it to the purpose? Does it show-I will constitution is itself essentially popular, not say merits of any kind-but maries such as you have a right, such as god are imperiously bound to look for! such, in a word, as can be deemed to fit a man for the supreme administration of your

The first item has an imposing appea-General Jackson was the man of the popular as its own. Buth parts of this people three years ago, though it were true is not to argue, but to trifle. Were it ewn accortained that he is the man of the people now, it would still be trifling, and not arguing, to say so. The question is, whether he sught to be the man of the people, at their next election? When a judge goes down to a now trial, it is to investigate anew the merits of the case, without reference to antece dent opinion; because new trials are for the correction, and not, as our political enthusiats will have it, the solemn repeution of old errors. The people, however well intentioned, are not infallible Perhaps they have done wrong. If so. it were a pity to shut the door of amen !ment upon them; by turning past blunders into precedents of authority. A awyrate, the vote they gave to General Jackson, right or wrong, is of no present bearing. Had it even been unanimous. it would not, I apprehend, have estabis claim to a perpetual seat in the susstitutional freedom of your subsequest elections;

But that vote, instead of being unanimous, did not include a majority, nor much more than a third part of the electoral suffrages. The style in which his friends are wont to addres you on this u)ject, is illusory,—What has been so often said, and reiterated, of his having been decidedly the popular favorite, spproches no measure to the truth than 99 does ed 261. This was the exact propo-tion of his strength in the colleges. There were indeed these other candidutes, among whom the 162 electors that were not for gen. Jackson, distribupar M. Jandot sed their preferences; of which the consequence was, more than he became the choice of the people as represented in them; but that the majority of suffrages being scattered and thrown away, his own minority, though fatal to his immediate hopes, was yet not quite so small as that of Mr. Adams. This advantage, if such it can be called, he undoudtedly had; but it was one, methinks, rather for consolation than for triumph. Suppose, instead of four there had been a dozen candidates; and that the largest number of suffrages that any one of them could count, instead of ninety-nine, had been but thirty. Such a state of things might occur; and yet, according to the arithmetic of the day, the man of thirty sufed and agent wishous a choice, the late the excert of the Porpoise, after the didnte list, and how much better 99 is dant then repaired on board the Vigi- frame wareliques than 84, among negative quantities, to lant, and the Greek interpreter opened years credit for appl gather laurels in a lost field, to soothe the Tu kish letters, which contained per with mortgage will final pay a the griefs of amultion by collecting tro- | duplicate invoices of the cargo. The Austrian brig was then to the number itself of his competitors, I aken by the captors. and the various views and speculations thence arising. But no matter's the alfice of the electors was, to choose a president; failing in this, they failed in every thing. There was no sufficient p rt of them united in sentiment to ef fect a constitutional indication of the people's will; and the entire proceed- Tackets on Tuesday the 29th. ing became a nullity; leaving it for a new experiment in another quarter to determine, who the popular candidate was, and to place him in the proud preeminence to which none else could lawfully be admixed. Of that alterior experiment, which has since been made, and which resulted, as you know, in favor of prace politics, it is the suctom of the unlitary par it is grossly incorrect, bealf in spirit and gainet the constitution? Is it possible for sophistry to make you believe, that a President chosen by the electoral surrounded him, so had any thing, great chambers in the only popular president of the country? Are you not as effects ally represented in the choice, when it is made by another body of electors, at the capitol? Be not decrived. Your and it has, with singular anxiety und caution, and by a double apparatus of means,-first, the electoral colleges, and men, as an elictrative resort, the lowe house of congress,-guaranteed to those momentous elections, on which the pa remount control of its administration But examine A. To say time depends, a charact and an operation as duplicate arrangement of the supreme law, are conceived in the same policy, and adapted to the same end. They noth contemplate the one desideratum, of a popular President, by representative election. Now, we have lately tried them both. We have made two successive experiments for a clificf magistrate. By the first, Gen. Jackson was not ascertained to be our choice. By the second, Mr. Adams was. Which of these gentlenen, upon constitutional evidence, has, in the contested point of popularity, the advantage-ground? Twice polled upon the subject, the nation has in n ither case approximated to a prefarence of the military candidate. On one occasion, the power of the majority was lost by being divided; on the othexerted in the election of an aider, a wiser, and a better man. BRUTUS.

We arrived here one week siece . after tage. a pleasant-passage by the way of ligiers, to which place we were ordered to transport our Consul General. You have heard of the inglorious conduct of the French blockading squadron in the skirmish which took place on the 5th ult. The Algerine flotilla had the audacity to put to sea and attack the French, and after throwing 300 shot, returned in triumph without the loss of a guaboat, The Bashaw was so much pleased at the conduct of his Marine, that he loaded the captains with presents, and gave each private a reward of seven dollars in
