A general examination, followed by a public distribution of prizes, closes the course of studies and the establishment is shut up from the first of September to the first of November, a period during which the prevailing diseases induce most of the parents to retire to the country.

The course of studies comprises the complete and simultaneous teaching of the French and English languages and literature, writing, arithmetic, geography, chronology, history, astronomy, and the different parts of needlework, lace making, tapestry, and fancy works.

School books and writing books are also found by the establishment, and paid for separately.

Payments to be made every three months and in advance. No deduction for the holidays or absence.

Madame Granet will make it a rule to avoid extra bills as much as possible, and will charge nothing but what she has actually laid out.

In opening such an establishment, Madame Granet is well aware that she can, as yet, have no claim here out to the confidence of the inhabitants of New Orleans; being totally a stranger in the city, she must entirely depend upon the kind recommendation of those persons of whom she is known, and among whom she is proud to mention the names of

His Excellency, A. B. Roman, Governor of Louisiana

Mr and Mrs Mazureau,
Mr and Mrs Holland
Mr and Mrs West,
Mr and Mrs Pilie,
Mr and Mrs Boyer,

Messrs. J F Canonge, Edmond Forstall, Wm. Nott, Theodore Nicolet, J Garnier, Quertier & Boutin.

Madame Granet has been a long time at the head of a similar institution in Paris; and having since passed seven years in London, she has acquired a complete knowledge of the systems of education in both countries.

Madame Granet is assisted by her two daughters, the eldest of whom, a pupil of the best masters in France and England, teaches the Piano, singing and drawing.

French and English literature will be taught by competent professors, who have successfully practiced in London and in Paris.

A physician will be attached to the establishment.

Religion, the foundation of every good education, will by carefully attended to. One day in the week will be consecrated to religious instruction by a proper person, and the pupils will be taken to church every Sunday, when the weather permits it.

Madame Granet engages to devote herself entirely to the care and superintendance of her establishment; to consider her pupils as her own children, to give them food both substantial and wholesome, a solid and moral education. In a word she will never lose sight of her laborious, but most honorable undertaking, and will endeavor to deserve in every way the confidence and esteem of parents.
