THE BEE.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED DAILY BY JEROME BAYON.
WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 28, 1832.

GOVERNOR.
W. L. D. DAWSON.

[illegible] mail arrived daily yesterday; but it brought [illegible] papers. In what quarter the things looking [illegible] Bustle the Argus can tell.

On the 12th instant there were sold at the brokers board [illegible]

U. S. bank stock	117

And extract of the Kentucky Gazette of the date of the 12th instant gives the Clay majority in that state at 1659. [illegible] "splendid victory," especially [illegible] Clay [illegible] who know of, who they put on a majority of 3000 [illegible] that in that state.

[illegible] got up rather late yesterday [illegible] under the splendid editorial [illegible] that day [illegible] Jackson friend, Mr. Denis Prieur, the [illegible] of the Bee?

[illegible] another column, some particulars of [illegible] have been made to this state, for the benefit of [illegible] Messrs. Baring, Brothers & co. of London, and [illegible] Prime, Ward, King & co. of New York.

The friends of Mr. Prieur are to meet to-night. The [illegible] therefore of the convention, has not been al[illegible] impure. If only those of the friends of that [illegible] attend the meeting, who are friendly to his "being a candidate for the place governor of Louisiana," [illegible] but a temporary account of empty [illegible] is probable that Bishop in the City can have [illegible] that Denis Prieur is qualified to fill that place; [illegible] never dream of offering him, he is utterly [illegible]

Mr. Prieur has received the generous support of the [illegible] party, in spite the one occasion. He [illegible] he [illegible] their congratulating for his selection, to the [illegible] the late elections. Now his pretension to become a candidate for governor, in opposition to a gentleman who has been accepted by the party, and in support of whom, if, as we are informed, Mr. Prieur himself has pledged his individual support!. He counts the support of the Argus and the Mercantile Advertiser, with view to the attainment of his ends, and exhibits his political forces [illegible] to be demonstrated, be [illegible] of more than 5000! Very well—the republicans will give him an outfit, to be rid of him, and leave him to the gentle mercies of his new friends.

Why is Mr. Prieur brought forward? Can any sensible man pretend that he has one single qualification that distinguishes him for the place? Has he either talents, [illegible] of Latin and knowledge of the interests of the state? If so, When and how did he acquire them? [illegible] one pretend that he is to be compared either with General Dawson or Judge White? If, in these respects, he cannot be compared with his competitors, why is he brought forward? Has he any political rendezvous? Or does he not throw himself upon the party to which he confesses to belong?—We pause for a reply.

[illegible] think of Denis Prieur proposing himself as a candidate for the governor of Louisiana, and remember their words three years hence, [illegible]

We give below the official returns of the election in this state, of the Electors for the President and Vice President of the United States, to which we have added those of 1828:

Majority of Jackson	[illegible]		[illegible]	27

The official returns from the parish of St. Landry have not been received. Clay's majority in that parish is supposed to be 175 votes; and if deducted from Jackson's official majority, would still leave the old general 1022 votes majority.

[illegible] is also present, [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] the constitution of that state. Citizens of the [illegible] have manifested this intention with satisfaction.

[illegible] and eminent [illegible], on Monday evening, at Bagot's [illegible], in the Rue [illegible]. We were not [illegible] the stirpiece, [illegible] cannot, therefore, speak of its merits. We hope to witness Hilson's Paul Pry, once again, ere he departs for the other hemisphere.

Day's benefit, "Isabella," which was enacted on Tuesday, was strongly cast and well played. Thisby [illegible] not so well done by Mr. Thorne as it was [illegible] Cowell. The house was [illegible] tolerable.

[illegible] "Scandal" is to be done this evening.—[illegible] Peter Teazle, is unsurpassed. His accompanying [illegible] as my host Teazle, will be spared by every one who can appreciate good acting. The manager deserves a liberal exchange for his constant exertions to gratify [illegible]

By the letter of 1832, silks imported from beyond the Cape of Good Hope are to pay fifty per cent more duty than [illegible] imported from Europe. The India silks are [illegible] for printing, both in England and the United States. The effect therefore of this discrimination is not simply to favor American silk printers of the incidental protection of a revenue duty, but to give English [illegible] a bounty of five pence;—for the China silks printed in England, are imported here at 5 per cent duty, while the same article, imported direct, for printing here, pays 10 per cent.

The last number of the London Foreign Quarterly Review contains an opening article in favor of Free Trade. The following paragraph of it may be deemed applicable to our Tariff Question.

"When the question is one of a permanent system of protection, not of the transition from a system of restriction to one of unrestrained intercourse, the substitution of prohibition, bearing a highly cost, for a prohibition, is a considerable step, because the protection admits of easier modification, till it may lose its protective character and quietly assimilate into a state of freedom. And, still more, a return from prohibitive duty to a state of prohibition is a great step in retrogression, which places us at an immeasurable distance from the point from which our principle diverges."

"We fully admit the necessity of so managing the transition from a protective to an unrestricted system, as to occasion as little as possible of individual distress; but it is obvious, that we must constantly bear in mind that the transition is to be made, our measures will be unwilling. We may proceed very gradually; we can perhaps hardly proceed by steps too slow, but we must step continually forward in the direction which we have determined to take. To examine whether the transition has been prudently managed will be a part of our duty, when, in a future number, we resume and conclude this important discussion. We shall then consider the results of the changes which have been made. But we cannot quit the subject now without declaring our conviction, that the consequences of the new measures, so far as they have been, have been to [illegible] British industry have been greatly augmented; that the increased importation has not checked in raw materials, or in the [illegible] manufactures predicted in England; that even in those very [illegible] branches of industry, bearing a supposed unfavorable proportion to the whole of commerce and consumption, in which there has been an increased competition of foreigners, it is at least very doubtful whether British industry, even in those particular branches, has not been enlarged by the change."

In the same number of the Foreign Quarterly, a signal imposture, that of Douville's "Travels in Central Africa," is ably and fully exploded. Douville so far deceived the geographical society of Paris as to obtain from it its prize of discovery—a gold medal of a thousand francs, at least and he was elected, also, an honorary member of the Royal Geographical Society of London. The Reviewer, at the end of his laudable labor of detection, says—

"We blush for those learned societies, (or cotteries, we should rather say, for if they were all public as they ought to be, they would not be thus imposed upon) which have thus been made the dupes of a vulgar imposture. The Royal Geographical Society of London, indeed, may be easily excused, for how can it be expected that honorable men, who habitually converse with none but persons of character, should be always upon their guard against such unpalliated sharpness. Even it be supposed that a committee will easily hart or suspicions of downright falsehood? But the Societe de Geographie appears in some measure implicated in the fraud, for it examined, or professed to examine, by a committee, the merits of M. Douvill's pretensions, and has sanctioned his fabrications by a laudatory report prefixed to the volumes which contain them. The Society owes to itself and the public some explanation of the means by which it was deceived. As to M. Douville himself, we doubt not that he will ere long see all his splendid discoveries reduced to one—namely, that the Sitcayy [illegible] cannot be long detailed."

LETTER TO THE PUBLIC—NO. V.

Mr. Editor, late years never "idle Sayings."

When the steeples [illegible] fork the [illegible] dose [illegible]

I perceive by a late meeting of the city council, the mayor is authorized—I beg his pardon—"respectfully invited" to [illegible] a little of the [illegible] which fills our gutters, and obstructs our sidewalks, to be removed—but whether!—into the middle of the streets of course; and as the yellow fever has ceased to be an epidemic, for this year, there probably, not being more than an hundred recent cases in the city, (on the 21st) it will be of very little consequence so long as it is concerned. But should there be (and such things have happened) a few successive days of moist; warm weather, before Christmas, the unmoistened quantities of vegetable matters in our streets may yet "kill" in the hands of our new destroyer, it may be, some of our old enemy. But let this pass; and let us enquire, why this resolution is adopted at this late hour, and why it was not acted on when it might have been effectual? when it would, as I firmly believe, have entirely prevented the yellow fever, and if it had not rendered the cholera comparatively harmless, it would at least have divested it of the horribly fatal character which it assumed during its first brief visit to our city.

Will anonymous authority attempt to revive the absolute nonsense of the foreign origin of yellow fever, and by refusing to acknowledge the birth-right of our scourge the annual epidemic, then endeavour to prove the infallibility of quarantines? Will they pretend to argue that an immense surface of stagnant water, saturated with vegetable and animal matter, and exposed to a southern sun, aided by innumerable piles of all kinds of refuse, from rotten wood to rotting carcasses, does never generate fever? or must we suppose them unaware of the doctrine of origin of yellow fever, as well as of its cause, and therefore believe that they being accustomed to regard this pestiferous scourge as little as they regard the [illegible] adventurous strangers.

As the mayor and city council possess and have exercised the [illegible] powers as well as ample means to render our city healthy and healthy, I believe as healthy, as any in the union, I will except none—we are confined to adopt one or the other of the above suppositions.

I will not, at present, enter upon the subject of the domestic origin and cause of fevers. Suffice it for the present, to say, that the weight of testimony is in favor of it, and that the "[illegible]" which is the immediate agent in exciting this disease is generated by the decomposition of vegetable matter, under certain favorable circumstances of heat, air, moisture, position, &c. which unfortunately are too often found in our notoriously filthy, yet growing and most important city.

The disease called cholera, is by no means a new affective in the catalogue of humane ailments. Medical men have for many years been theoretically, and in the world, practically acquainted with it, and yet, [illegible] that they may, they know very little of its pathology, and less of the origin of the atmospheric influence which produces it. That it belongs to the class of diseases called fevers, there is, I think, little doubt, and we are therefore warranted in believing that it is modified and increased by the same causes which produce fever generally. In this opinion we are borne out by the example of other cities, whose rulers have been wise enough to prepare for it in time.

But I have determined that my letters shall possess one recommendation—brevity—and this is already sufficiently prolix. Though it be at the eleventh hour, and though I sincerely believe that thousands have fallen victims to our tardy precaution, I hope that the city council will persist in their, I fear, too late, yet truly wise and humane resolution, of cleaning our disgustingly filthy streets. [illegible] WHAT THE MAYOR DO!

At a meeting of the pupils of the late Mr Francois [illegible] held on the 24th instant, agreeably to previous notice,

Mr. A. Dupuy was called to the chair, and J. Bermudez appointed Secretary.

The Chairman having stated the object of the meeting on motion it was—

RESOLVED, 1st, That all the pupils invited to [illegible] respect on their late until the 31st of December inclusive.

2d. That a monument be erected to the memory of the late Mr. d'Hebecourt, as a testimony of respect on the part of his pupils.

3d. That Messrs. Valcourt, Duret, Gaston Brosle, J. B. Perrault, Pre. Debuys, Camille Zenitague, Phil. Lanaux, Pre. Camote, [illegible] Flavius, J. B. Déjean, Edward Correjole and Francois Gaingie, be appointed a committee to collect subscriptions only, from the pupils of the deceased, to erect a monument worthy of the man who spent his life in devoted to the education of the youth of Louisiana.

4th. That Messrs. J. B. Perrault, A. Dupuy, and Edward Correjole, be appointed a committee of finance, who shall duly be entrusted with the superintendance of the erection of a monument; and that they receive the thanks of this assembly for the use of his room.

A. DUPUY, President.

J. BERMUDEZ, Secretary.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 16.

We give below all the intelligence we have received in relation to the election in Kentucky. The returns are certain from every district except Lyon's, and we have returns from all that district but two counties, and giving the majority we received in August in those counties, makes the the majority as stated at 1659.

It will be seen by the above returns we have lost the state, and that the cause of the Bank has triumphed.—But the democracy of the state have no cause to despair, as our intelligence leaves no room to doubt but we have received the vote of Pennsylvania by a majority of 30,000; of Ohio about 6000, and have gained the state by the most direct bribery and corruption of the bank and its partisans,—and the heavy and excessive rain that fell during the days of the election.—*Ken. LOUISIANA LOAN.

The following are the particulars of the New Loan for the state of Louisiana, of which nothing was heard excepting within the last few days. It will be observed that the usual loan contractors have nothing to do with it.

NORFOLK, Nov. 14.

NEWS FROM THE CAPE DE VERDS.

The brig Funchal, captain Menis, arrived in Hampton Roads from Madeira, via Isle of May, having sailed from the latter 27th October, brings intelligence strongly confirmatory of the distressed condition of the Cape de Verd Islands generally, from the awful calamity of famine. An intelligent passenger, with whom we held an interview, states that the condition of the Islanders has not been at all exaggerated, in the accounts previously received in the United States, and that the benedictions of thousands will be poured forth for the timely relief that from one country, as in Brava and Fogo, the distress was most calamitous; within a few months, 200 persons had perished there by famine, and such was their abject condition, that even a worm-eaten biscuit was caught at with avidity, and the blessing of heaven invoked on the donor. A vessel from Lisbon, laden with provisions for the sufferers had been spoken by a cruiser, and was afterwards run over, in the night, by another vessel and sunk, by which these unhappy beings were deprived of the timely relief of which she would otherwise have been the bearer.

How pleasing must be the reflection of those in our country, an I in our immediate domicil, who have so readily stretched forth their hand to the aid of this afflicted people. Of such indeed, if that treasure laid up in heaven, (of which the scriptures speak) which neither moth [illegible] doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal—it is, surely, that charity which covers a multitude of sins.—Boston.

Focal statue of Memnon.—This statue has puzzled many travellers, who have endeavored to account for the sound that issues from it every morning at sunrise. This sound, for centuries considered as the greatest mystery of Egyptian priestcraft, was recently heard by an English traveller, Sir Edward Smith, who asserts, that the sound does not proceed from the statue but from the pedestal, and that it arises from the impact of the air upon that part of the pedestal which are arranged so as to produce the surprising effect. The sound in question is said to resemble that of the breaking of the string of the lyre, and Dacier, the translator of Juvenal, accounted for it this way. "The statue being hollow, the heat of the sun heated the air which it contained, and this air, issuing at some crevice, produced the sounds of which the priests gave their own interpretation." The Baron Humboldt, when in South America, examined, on the banks of the Orinoco, several granite rocks, from which the natives declared, that they had frequently heard towards sunrise, subterraneous sounds resembling those of the organ. Sounds, like that of a string breaking have frequently heard by travellers in Egypt, at sunrise, issuing from a monument of granite situated near the centre of the spot on which the palace of Carnac stands. There is, therefore no doubt that the music of the statue of Memnon proceeds altogether from natural cause, though the priests of Egypt inculcated a different doctrine.
