FOR GOVERNOR

HENRY JOHNSON.

NEW-ORLEANS:

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 17, 1841.

The partizans of Mr. TYLER are continually asserting that the Executive is President of the people and not of a party. He did not think so when he relied upon the support of a party for his election to the Vice Presidency. We apprehend that if he had rejected party at that trying emergency and thrown himself upon the people for support, he would have been left in a most pitiable minority. To attain power he was willing to avail himself of party influence, though now peradventure he may look down from his proud eminence, and spurn the generous hearts that toiled for him. It is ever thus with the feeble minded and ungrateful. Apostacy always seeks a plea in the pretences of patriotism, and the statesman who contemplates the desertion of his friends, discovers a ready argument in the fancied wants of his country.

But what evidences has Mr. TYLER furnished of his being the President of the people? What act has he performed by which his love of the people and his interest in their welfare have been displayed? His bank vetoes are about the only positive indication of fixed policy that we have yet seen, and we fancy that none but the locofocos will be willing to admit that they demonstrate his respect and regard for the people. Was it the people who wished the cabinet appointed by the lamented HARRISON to be disgraced and driven into resignation, or who recommended the UPSHURS and WICKLIFFES as successors? Wherein have the people manifested their approval of his Accidency's measures, or their confidence in his administration? It may be, however, that he really entertains the incredible idea of supposing that the defeats which the whigs have suffered in the fall campaign, are Tyler victories—proofs that he is sustained and trusted by the people. Against such preposterous infatuation as this it were folly to argue. If it be true that he points to the result of the elections in Maryland, New York, Georgia, Michigan &c., and exclaims "Look at my victories," he has reached a point beyond which the force of folly can no further go, and it were as futile a task to reason against such a distempered imagination, as it would be to chop logic with a monomaniac.

The time is not far distant when Mr. TYLER will receive such startling assurances of his delusion as will cause the scales to drop even from his eyes. Let him present himself before the people, for whom his admirers declares he has labored with unselfish patriotism. Let him claim the reward of his services, and we shall soon see what they think of our "honest President." We begin now to hope that Mr. TYLER will run for a second term. It would be myrth and incense to those whom he has abandoned and wronged, to behold him in a lean minority in every State of the Union.

THE BANK QUESTION.

To the Editors of the New-Orleans Bee.

In your paper of yesterday, you have an article from the Baltimore American on the NATIONAL DEBT OF ENGLAND, stating that it has now reached the enormous amount of four thousand millions of dollars; that the annual interest thereon is $120,000,000—one hundred and twenty millions of dollars. It is also remarked that "the interest on this debt may continue long to be paid; the capital never can be."

This enormous debt is all due to the British people, and to them the annual interest is paid. The existence of this debt, however burthensome it may be to the lower classes of people, does not impoverish the British nation; and the payment of the one hundred and twenty millions of dollars annually for the interest in no serious manner affects the exchanges or the currency of that country.

How different the position of England would be, if she owed this debt abroad, and was obliged to export annually the equivalent of $120,000,000, without receiving in exchange one farthing. That amount is more than one half of all the gold and silver coin in Great Britain, and is more than four times the average amount of bullion held by the Bank of England. It is known that the grain crop of Great Britain, when short one-fourteenth of the average amount—say short in quantity 3,500,000 quarters—takes $25,000,000—endangers the stability of the Bank of England, and that a deficiency of one-seventh in the grain crop would cause every bank of issue in Great Britain and Ireland to suspend specie payments, or redeem the convertible paper currency of the country. And it cannot be denied that while such a state of things would continue to exist, a convertible paper currency could not be maintained.

Now be not startled, Messrs. Editors, when you learn that enormous as the amount of annual interest paid by Great Britain to her own people, the people of Louisiana have, for many years to come, a yet larger amount (in proportion to her population and her resources,) to pay annually, not to one another, but to foreigners, (by foreigners I mean not only the citizens and subjects of other nations but also all others residing beyond the limits of Louisiana.) This I will proceed to show.

The total amount of debts due by Louisiana abroad is about $36,000,000. This is made up by State Bonds, City and Municipality bonds, bank stocks held abroad, Citizens' Bank Post notes, and the debt of the Gas Bank to the assignees of the late U. S. Bank of Pennsylvania. The annual interest on these sums is about $2,000,000. The amount annually withdrawn from our State by absentee proprietors and capitalists, is not less than $1,000,000; and if we add to this sum the amount withdrawn annually by persons who have accumulated some property by their industry during a temporary residence amongst us—and who return with their profits to their native country—and also the amount spent by those of our fellow citizens who annually visit the north and foreign countries—the amount will be found to be near $1,500,000.

Within the next three years the Consolidated Association, the Bank of Louisiana, and the Union Bank will have to pay in England, $3,950,000, or $1,083,333 per annum; and the Citizens' Bank during the next two years will have to pay about $400,000 per annum.

You will find that these sums amount in the aggregate to over FIVE MILLIONS OF DOLLARS; which enormous sum Louisiana must send abroad annually for some years, and for which she will not receive one cent of equivalent.

The population of the kingdom of Great Britain is 25,300,000. The annual interest on the national debt is $4 75 to each inhabitant. But the proportion of the annual drain of $5,000,000 on each inhabitant of Louisiana for the next three years, will be $14 90; but if on each white inhabitant is, $31 64!!

The proportion of the national debt of England—a left which from its magnitude, all agree will never be paid—to each inhabitant of the kingdom, is $160. The debt due abroad by Louisiana, is $102 to each of its inhabitants! or, counting only the white population, is $227 each! Supposing the resources of each country represented by its population, the national debt of Great Britain is only six per cent. greater than the debt of Louisiana; but our debt is incomparably more burthensome, inasmuch as it is due abroad. Now let us suppose Great Britain indebted abroad in the same ratio to her population that Louisiana is—having to pay annually for some years $14 90 for each inhabitant—and receiving no equivalent therefor, it would amount to three hundred and fifty-five millions of dollars. Now, if the exportation of 25,000,000 of coin endangers her banking system, and depresses to an alarming extent all the great interests of that country, what would be the effect of an attempt to pay abroad in any one year, a sum nearly double that of all the coin in the kingdom? Can any one believe that she could after she had redeemed all her notes, retain sufficient coin in the country for the purposes of currency?

How is it possible then for Louisiana so circumstanced, to maintain a redeemable circulation; and if our banks redeem all their circulation, can any one believe that the specie they will pay out can remain in the state?

My data is derived from the most unquestionable sources, and I challenge the strictest scrutiny. If my conclusions be correct, what a subject for reflection is presented to the people of Louisiana and their enlightened representatives!

Popular clamor has ascribed all our troubles to the suspension of specie payments by the banks, and although their aggregate circulation is not more than the aggregate amount of the specie in their vaults—the present unfavorable rate of exchange is charged on them also. Yet all admit there has been no overtrading, and that there is no redundancy of currency!—The ordinary causes of unfavorable exchanges not existing, we are forced to look for the cause elsewhere, and I maintain that it is found in the enormous amount of our foreign debt.

It is somewhat surprising that our intelligent Chief Magistrate in treating of the question of the currency in his message, should have entirely overlooked the most important facts connected with it—our indebtedness abroad—and it is to be regretted that he should have fallen into the same error with Mr. Appleton in ascribing to Louisiana as a part of her wealth—upwards of 30,000,000 of the products of other States—nearly as much indebted as ourselves.

The amount of exports, the products of Louisiana, will not this commercial year exceed $11,000,000, and nearly half this amount will be required for purposes leaving no equivalent whatever. How much of the remainder, including the commercial profits of New Orleans, may be required to pay for articles of consumption imported into the State, it is difficult to say—but if it be but ten cents per day for each inhabitant, it will amount to over twelve millions of dollars. It is therefore sufficiently evident that no coin can be looked for this year in exchange for our products, nor indeed for many years to come.

FRANKLIN.

☞ We mentioned some days ago the mysterious disappearance of Mr. Fleming, a senator in the Pennsylvania legislature. Since then, we see it stated that his friends have received a letter from him, dated Burlington, Iowa, Nov. 7, stating that he had just arrived from Black River, a distance of 600 miles above St. Louis, and that he would be at home by the 1st of December.

☞ At Cincinnati on the 7th instant, the river was rising 3 inches an hour and was higher than it had been this fall.

PEOPLE'S LYCEUM.

THE FAIR.—We would remind the public that this is the last day of the Fair at the St. Louis Ball Room. Let all who are disposed to contribute to this work of benevolence repair thither and give their mite to the destitute orphans who are to reap the harvest of public bounty.

From the Natchitoches Herald we learn that 1030 bales of Texas cotton had been received there since the commencement of the season up to the 11th inst., of which 667 were cleared for this city, leaving a balance of stock of 361 bales.

☞ The loco-focos in New York are already quarrelling about the next presidency. The Albany Argus in a long and labored article, written with considerable care and emanating, it is supposed, from General Dix, urges the nomination of Mr. Van Buren. On the other hand, the New York Standard reads the Argus a lecture on the subject; and after despatching Mr. Van Buren to Kinderhook to luxuriate on krouts and cabbages, it advocates the selection of some mysterious personage, whom we take to be John C. Calhoun. We go decidedly for Van Buren. We beat him once when backed by 40,000 office-holders—it will go hard, but we can beat him again, without their aid. Besides he is a respectable antagonist, whereas Mr. Calhoun could not carry more than one State in the Union—Give us Van Buren by all means.

LEGISLATURE.

The House of Representatives adjourned yesterday at an early hour, after refusing to appoint a reporter. The Senate, we believe, still retains that officer.

The speaker of the House announced that Mr. Bedford had been yesterday considered elected as one of the committee on the Bank Question, through a mistake, he having but received 4 votes while Mr. Hardesty had received 15. The latter gentleman is consequently on the committee which is now composed as follow: Messrs. C. M. Conrad (whig,) Canon (L.f.) Boudousquie (w.) Hardesty (l. f.) Winchester (w.)—three whigs and two loco. s.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

IN SENATE.

[WEDNESDAY, December 15, 1841.

After the senate had organized, a message was received from the governor, sending back to the senate, in which it originated last session, a bill entitled "An act authorizing the emission of five new bonds of the state, payable to the order of the Bank of Louisiana," with the objections of the governor to said bill. A certain clause of the bill, providing that one year must expire, from the time the old bonds fall due, before the new bonds be made payable, the governor objects as tending to compromise the dignity of the state. To add a similar condition to the acknowledgement of a legitimate debt, seemed very improper. Besides, the governor thinks the bill can now effect nothing, as the original bonds have been bought and paid for by the Union Bank, since last session.

Mr. Hoa, who had been a member of the committee of the Judiciary, to whom the bill had been referred, could not enter into the governor's views. He could see no impropriety in the clause of the bill to which the governor objects. He is persuaded no member of the Legislature has any tendency to compromise the dignity of the state. Not only was the course censured, a thing of daily occurrence, but, moreover it was a measure contemplated by our laws. Supposing the new bonds to bear the same date as the old ones, could it not happen that the latter although supposed to be lost, might be found and presented to the Bank, at the same time, or before the new bonds, in whose place they were issued. That the Bank would be embarrassed, in such a case, may be easily conceived. The delay of one year was not counted with a view of benefitting the debtors of the state. [illegible]

Mr. Hoa introduced a bill, passed by the senate last session, [illegible] committee on the judiciary. The title of the bill, "Act supplementary to divers acts relative to elections, and the drawing up of a digest of the laws touching elections generally."

Mr. Declouet asked and obtained leave of absence for the member from the German coast.

A message from the House of Representatives requested the concurrence of the senate in two resolutions, one concerning the board of public works and the other relative to the New Orleans Draining Company.

[illegible] were named on the joint committee to consider the former; and Messrs. Hoa and [illegible] on the committee to consider the latter resolution.

Mr. Bossier introduced a bill changing the place of holding elections in the different districts of the parish of Natchitoches.

Mr. Bossier introduced a resolution making it the duty of the board of public works to cause to be made in the bayou Dolet, in the parish of Natchitoches, all the improvements wanted, in order to make said bayou navigable from its source to its junction with Red River.

Mr. Declouet gave notice that he intended to introduce a bill creating an election district in the parish of St. Martin.

A resolution, introduced by the senator from Orleans on the first day of the session, for referring different portions of the governor's message to the standing committees of the senate, came up as the order of the day, and was adopted.

On motion, the senate adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

From the New York Tribune.

Congress assembled in Washington on Monday. What it will do may be doubtful; what it ought to do is to be very clear to our mind. In our judgment it should

I. Retrench the expenditures of the government unsparingly, and thoroughly, beginning with the pay of its own members. Cut them down to $6 per day or $42 per week instead of $56 per week now taken, and reduce still more the extravagant rate now allowed as mileage, and the $9,000, $6,000 and $3,000 salaries would be easy. The $9,000, $6,000 and the sinecure or nearly useless offices be readily pared off after that. We shall be bitterly disappointed if a general retrenchment is not effected at this session.

II. Abolish the navy board and thoroughly reform and purify that branch of the public service.

III. Put up the ratio of representation to nearly or quite 100,000, and thus reduce the members of the house to about 180. This would greatly facilitate the despatch of business, and probably reduce the long session one half, saving the country in various ways over $1,000,000 per annum.

IV. Establish a stable though efficient (we do not expect now a perfect) system of conducting the fiscal business of the government.

V. Revise carefully the tariff, and adjust it to the interests and wants of the country, keeping in view and resisting the legislation and policy of other countries which operate injuriously upon our home industry.

VI. Reform our post office system, by greatly restricting or totally abolishing the franking privilege, regulating the postage of periodicals and pamphlets and greatly reducing that of letters—cutting down at the same time the salaries of postmasters who receive over $1,000.

VII. Investigate thoroughly the great mass of private claims which have been suffered to accumulate for the last six or eight years; sift them sharply, and pay those which are honest and just.

We know that other things will claim and justly receive the attention of congress; but if our friends will do those above named, or a good portion of them, we shall feel that the whig pledges to the country have been nobly redeemed, their duty faithfully discharged, and they in good condition for the important congressional and state elections of 1842.

The Personal Character and Habits of Washington.—The following are recollections of Washington, derived from repeated opportunities during the three last years of his public life. He was over six feet in stature, of strong, muscular frame, without fullness of covering, well formed and straight. He was a man of most extraordinary physical strength. In his house his action was calm, deliberate and dignified, without pretentions to gracefulness or peculiar manner, but merely natural, and such as one would think it should be in such a man. When walking in the street his movements had not the soldiery air which might be expected. His habitual motions had been formed long before he took command of the American armies, in the wars of the interior, and in the surveying of wilderness lands, employments in which grace and elegance were not likely acquired.

At the age of sixty-five, time had done nothing towards bending him out of his natural erectness. His deportment was invariably grave, it was sobriety that stopped short of sadness. His presence inspired a veneration and a feeling of awe, rarely experienced in the presence of any man.—His mode of speaking was slow and deliberate, not as though he was in search of fine words, but that he might utter those only adapted to his purpose. It was the usage of all persons in good society, to attend Mrs. Washington's levee every Friday evening. He was always present. The young ladies used to throng around him in conversation. There were some of the well remembered belles of that day who imagined themselves to be favorites with him. As these were the only opportunities they had of conversing with him, they were disposed to use them.—One would think that a gentleman and a gallant soldier, if he could ever laugh, or dress his countenance in smiles, would do so when surrounded by young and admiring beauties. But this was never so; the countenance of Washington never softened or changed its habitual gravity.

One who had lived always in his family said, that his manner in public, and in the seclusion of most retired life, was always the same. Being asked whether Washington could laugh, this person said that this was a rare circumstance, but that one instance was remembered, when he laughed most heartily at her narration of an incident in which she was a party concerned; and in which he applauded her agency. The late General Cobb, who was long a member of his family during the war—and who enjoyed a laugh as much as any man could—said that he never saw Washington laugh excepting when Col. Scammel—if this was the person—came to dine at head quarters. Scammel had a fund of ludicrous anecdotes and a manner of telling them which relaxed even the gravity of the commander-in-chief.

General Cobb also said that the forms of proceedings at head-quarters were exact and precise, orderly and punctual. At the appointed moment, Washington appeared at the breakfast table. He expected to find all the members of his family—Cobb, Hamilton and Humphreys were among them—awaiting him. He came dressed for the day, and brought with him the letters and despatches of the preceding day, with short memoranda of the answers to be made, also the substance of orders to be issued. When breakfast was over these papers were distributed among his aids to be put into form.

Soon after he mounted his horse to visit his troops, and expected to find, on his return before noon, all the papers prepared and ready for inspection and signature. There was no familiarity in his presence, it was all sobriety and business. His mode of life was abstemious and temperate. He had a decided preference for certain sorts of food, probably from early connections. Throughout the war, as it was understood in his military family, he gave a part of every day to private prayer and devotion.

While he lived in Philadelphia, as President, he rose at four in the morning, and the general rule of his house was, that the fires should be covered, and the lights extinguished, at a certain hour, whether this was nine or ten, is not recollected.

He devoted one hour every other Tuesday, from three to four, to public visits. He understood himself to be visited as the President of the United States, and not on his own account. He was not to be seen by any body and every body; but required that every one who came should be introduced by his secretary, or by some gentleman whom he knew himself. He lived on the south side of Market street, just below Sixth. The place of reception was the dining-room in the rear, twenty-five or thirty feet in length, [illegible] Washington, clad in black velvet, his hair in full dress, pow-[illegible]
