Without in reality changing the distances of places, it would have the effect of bringing all parts nearer to each other, and would give to the whole might consider himself as very ne any other part; for at the expens go a long one. The over crowded and unhealtly parts of towns would immediately scatter their inhabitants to the country; for a man with such cheep and speedy conveyance at his command, would be as near his business, although living several miles off, as he is now in an adjoining street. A man living in the ocean as only beyond the nearest hill, for he would only have to wish it, and he would be there. In like manner, the inhabitant of the coast for a very small sacrifice might visit the counties of the interior. The present heavy charges for bringing produce to market from great distances being thus nearly saved, the Luver every where would purchase cheaper, and the producer would be better renumerated. In a word, such a change would arise as if right thigh and leg were also bandaged the whole of Britain had been compressed by magic into a circle of a few miles in diameter, yet without any single part losing the least of its magnitude or heauties; and the sea would be but a little way south of the metropolis, and however, some how or other, interest d Edinburgh but a little way north, and the mountains of Wales but a little way to the west. This appears visionary; but it is less so than it would have been 70 years ago, to anticipate what has come to pass, that the common time of travelling from London to Edinburgh would be 46 hours. At the opening of the Rail Road near Darlington last year. a train of loaded carriages was dragged along by one little steam engine; a distance of 25 miles within two hours; in some parts of the journey the speed was more than 20 miles an hour. The whole load was nearly equal to a regiment of soldiers, and the coal expended was under the value of a crown. An island with such roads would be an im pregnable fortres; for in less time than an enemy would require to disembark

PANORAMA EXHIBITION. THE great Panoramic picture of the City of Puris, the Capital of the Kingdom of France is now exhibiting in the building on the public square of Rampart street. The view is taken from the roof of the south end of the palace of the Tuilleries; the spectator must therefore immagine himself pleaced on this eleulited situation which commands an extensive prospect over the whole city.

Immediately under the eve of the pectator in a northern direction, is the roof of the King's appartments, and on the right that of the long picture gallery stretching enstward as far as the Louvre; -This gallery bounds the place de Carousel on the south side and the new gallery on the north, in the centre of this square is seen the triumphal arch. On this square Banaparte was went to review his batallious previous to their departure for their respective destinations, and here oft the walls resounded with the clang of martial music. On the west side of the palace the spectator looks down on the Garden of the Tueleries, and beyond that in the distance is seen the palace of the Garde de Meubles, and the woods of the Champ Elysees in the distance.

When we consider that Paris has been the theatre of so many great political events which have convulsed Equirope for thirty years past, few, if any subjects of equal interest for a picture coald be offered to the public. Admittance---- 60 cents.
