[From the Boston Patriot.]

MR. CLAY.—Ten years since this distinguished individual raised his voice in the national council to warn his countrymen of the danger to which their liberties would be exposed by the abuse of power by military chieftains. Then the arbitrary conduct of General Jackson awakened his apprehensions, and caused him to pour forth thoughts that breathed in words that [illegible] with a force, that proved his [illegible] and bore conviction to many hearts. From that period to the present time, he appears to have watched with intense anxiety, the spreading of a disposition to confer an unjustifiable and disproportionate reward on mere military merit. Called by circumstances to renounce these opinions, or by firmly and nobly adhering to them, to lay himself open to [illegible] the most unmeasured, he cheerfully sacrificed himself for the good of his country. By this vote at the last Presidential election, he placed the seal on all his previous declarations, and established a claim to the lasting gratitude of his countrymen, for delivering them, for a period, from that power which has proved the destruction of many prosperous republics. We know not how others may feel, but to us there is something peculiarly solemn and touching in the circumstances attending his late announciation of the same sentiments at Baltimore. We behold a man, whose life has been devoted to his country, who cannot but be conscious of his deservedly high estimation with the friends of freedom and good order, brought by disease to consider himself midway between time and another world, summoning all his power to guard those for whom he has lived and suffered, against dangers the most momentous and alarming. We cannot wonder that his full heart should prompt the most powerful expression: that he should give utterance to the long cherished opinions in tones the most solemn and commanding. Should this, by the appointment of God, prove to be his last testimony to the deepness and fervency of his convictions on this subject, we shall regard it as in most felicitous keeping with all that preceded it.

What must be the character of the men and the cause which compels to the most shameful and virulent abuse of an act and of sentiments, which, with all who consider the circumstances we have alluded to, will not only be justified, but commended. We envy not the man whose ruthless malice dictates to him a parallel between this noble republican and Milton's Satan: or urges to the rash imputations of falsehood and impiety. We trust in God, there is a redeeming spirit in the people, which will forever secure our favored land from the rule of a party, whose heralds and precursors have been the executioners of innocent men, the slanderers of all that is elevated in character and conduct, the profaners of all that is sacred in religion, the violaters of the dread solemnities of a future world.

Assassination of Major Laing and Captain Clapperton.

It is with great concern we state that there is no longer any doubt with respect to the fate of these enterprising, persevering, but unfortunate travellers. They have both been murdered. The Pasha of Tripoli has received letters from one of his officers in the interior of Africa, communicating the painful intelligence.

It appears that Major Laing was severely wounded by robbers in the interior of Touait. Having, however, recovered, in consequence of the kind attention of a marabout, or priest, he at length succeeded in reaching Timbuctoo. But he had scarcely arrived, before the Foulahs, that powerful and warlike horde which at present reigns exclusively over the immense deserts of central Africa, came, to the number of thirty thousand, and demanded that Major Laing should be delivered up to them, that they might put him to death; "and thus," as they observed, "prevent Christian nations from receiving such information as might enable them, at some future period, to penetrate into, and enslave, the countries of Africa." Before the arrival of the Foulahs, twenty-four chiefs, among whom was a female called Nang Beira (Princess-Mother,) commanded simultaneously in Timbuctoo. One of these chiefs of the name of Othman-Vould-Ould-Abdelkhar, had received Major Laing into his house, on the recommendation of the Sheik El Mokhtar, with whom he had taken refuge after having escaped the dagger of the Hangara.* When the Foulahs presented themselves before Timbuctoo, and demanded Major Laing's head, his host, Othman-Vauld-Ould-Abdelkhar, contrived his escape at night, escorted by several servants, who were supposed to be trustworthy. It unfortunately happened, however, that one of them, of the same of Rehhel, had been bribed by the Foulahs; and this fellow not only delivered Major Laing into their hands, but gave him the first of the stabs under which he fell. Every body knows the praises which Denham and Clapperton, in their Narrative published two years ago, bestowed on the sultan Bello, the sovereign of these very Foulahs who have just assassinated Laing, and Clapperton himself. It was a relation of the Sultan Bello's, Alfamed-Labbou, who repaired to Timbuctoo, on the arrival of Major Laing. After having accomplished his immediate object by the assassination of our brave friend, he destroyed the oligarch in Timbuctoo, and established, as the sole governor of the city, the very Othman-Vould—Ould—Abdelkhar whom we have [illegible] mentioned. Poor Clapperton was murdered at Kakatoo, the ordinary residence of the Sultan Bello; notwithstanding the kind reception which he had experienced from the Sultan on his first visit. This double perfidy of the African Prince, by whom these sanguinary acts have been either ordered or permitted, and that after having shewn so much attachment to the English, appears to have been simply owing to the distrust created in his mind by certain individuals, who represented our unfortunate countrymen as spies sent for the purpose of ascertaining the best means of facilitating the conquest of his country.

*The inhabitants of Touait.

The Detroit Gazette mentions, on the authority of a gentleman who spent several days at Chicago, during the month of march last, that the Winnebagoes were making preparations for war, and had invited the Sioux to assist them in driving the white faces from their country. The Sioux declined re-engaging in hostilities; but promised them a hiding place in case of their defeat. The Potawatamies, who are on friendly terms with them, communicated the information. Dr. Wolcott, [illegible] Agent at Chicago, has made [illegible] to the Department for [illegible] force to be stationed there, which has not been before, thought necessary.

Spots on the Sun.—There are more than twenty spots of various shapes and sizes to be seen with a common sea telescope on the sun's disc, one very large one near his upper limb, which, on comparison with his diameter, must be vastly larger than the earth. The cold weather, is no doubt, occasioned by the great diminution of the solar rays. In 1816, we had just such a season. The spots on the sun were numerous, and many of them visible to the naked eye.

Wreck.—The Spanish ship Union, from St. Andrews for Havana, was fallen in with on the 19th ult. off the Bahama banks, by the brig Aurora, of New-York, having been wrecked two days previous. Nine men were picked up in the boat, and the rest, fifty-three in number, who had landed on the Grand Isaacs, were taken off and carried to Matanzas.

A vessel bound for Chili with 160 passengers from some European port, was wrecked off the coast of Africa, near the desert of Sahara, in consequence of the violent currents in that quarter.—They would have fallen into the hands of the merciless Arabs, had not some ships providentially made their appearance, a rare occurrence in those latitudes.

Long Question.—A sloop missed stays while beating out of the harbor of Philadelphia on the 12th ult. and run foul of a hackney coach, which was passing on the steam-boat wharf—the latter received some injury. The Philadelphia lawyers are said to be somewhat puzzled whether an action for the trespass should be brought in the Admiralty or the Mayor's court. The case will probably be settled by compromise.

DISTRESSING.

From the Georgetown Columbian, May 22.

Prince George's county, was on Saturday evening last, visited by the most tremendous thunder storm ever witnessed. It commenced about five o'clock, and lasted for half an hour. The lightning was very sharp and vivid, and the rain descended in torrents.—During the storm, a large tree situated close to a kitchen on the farm of Mrs. Williams, near Lower Marlboro, was struck and the lightning descended the chimney, and killed five out of eleven persons, who had taken shelter in it—two men, two women, and a boy. The remaining six were thrown to the ground, very much stunned by the shock, and considerably bruised. A remarkable instance of providence presented itself. A nurse with an infant in her arms, seated between two of the persons which were killed received not the slightest injury, neither her nor the child, although the shock was sufficiently great to throw her from her seat. The storm did much damage throughout the country, an estimate of which cannot be furnished to send you at this time.
