J. PITOT, Judge New-Orleans. Jime 2, 1828.

NEW-YORK, June 13. Latest from Europe -By the ship Pallas, Capt. Brown, arrived vesterday, in 27 days from Havre, we have received Havre papers to the 9th, and Paris to the 8th ult. inclusive.

News had been received at Constanimople, from Odessa, that the Russians had been making military reconnoissances, of the Gulph of Sisopolis, and it was supposed that they would land there for the purpose of taking the Turkish army in the rear. The Russians had also sent all their disposable force in that direction, and put an embargo upon the vessels of all nations, and interdicted the trade of the White, as well as of the Black Sea. This report came by the way of Marseilles, and does not correspond with anoter hbelow.

All was tranquil as before Constantinople, say the Paris papers on the 11th April, although the most disquieting war reports arrived daily from Bucharest and Jassy. Meantime the Porte regards its famous manifesto as justified by the he words attribued to the Reis Effendi gnure des rues Bourben et Orleans, dans addressed to a foreign consul. "Inla maison de Madame Porrenne'. Ce lo stead of one war, Russia will make two: Russian government will open the eyes of the European powers.

> Something new under the Sun .- Recruiting stations for the United States Navy have been established at Carlisle Chambersburg and Harrisburg, in the interior of Pennsylvania, under the general command of the gallant Capt. Jesse D. Elliot, resident at Carlisle, the principal depot. The suggestion was made by Capt. Elliot and assented to by the Secretary of the Navy. The recruits have been numerous it is said. of a character better entitled to confidence than many of those picked up on the seaboard. Drunkards and idlers are rejected. Many of them have never seen a ship or the water of the oceen, but they are good stuff. The fitting of the recruits in the naval dress. with straw hats, gives employment to many of the inhabitants in those places.

Lady Hervey, (the sister of Marshioness Wellesley) has been married to the Marquis Carmarthen, eldest son of his Grace of Leeds. Thus Papisty and republicanism have stormed the highest places, and two noble Marquises have, like Lord Mansfield, (vide Pope) yielding to the impulse of nature, in fall ing victims to fine forms and bright eyes. Thunder Storm at Baltimore.—The storm which was experienced in this vicinity on Thursday morning last, accompanied with such heavy thunder claps, was very destructive at Baltimore on Wednesday night. > From the Illinois Gazette. A new way of making a General .-As Duff Green receives the appellation of General through the United States, it may not be amiss to give a statement Green was one of the beef contractors state of Missouri. Being of an overbearing, selfish disposition, few of the other contractors wished to travel with him: but it so happened, at one time, that four of their droves met in the wilderness, on their way to the army. The others were not well pleased with the junction of forces and the company of such a creature as Green. Yet one of them possessing a good deal of adroitness, and knowing Green's consummate vanity, concluded to turn the misfortune of his company to advantage. He therefore styled the collective droves "the Missouri brigade," and gave Duff Green the appellation of "General of the brigade." By this policy he made Doff a very sociable companion, and as obliging for the time as he had formerly been brutish. Re has ever since styled himself "General." And though he was never General over any thing but bullocks, yet the people to the eastward actually think that he was elected General of human beings in the state of Missouri.

NAPOLEON'S LOVE FOR HIS COUNTRY. Bonaparte, when a boy, used to have frequent disputes with his uncle, the executed before Theodore Seghers, at archdeacon of Ajaccio, about the mischief done by his goats (which procured him the appellation of an innevator from the old man,) and he does not sppear to have forgotten his former grudge against them. He brooded up to the period of manhood on the vexations and plantation. debasement of his country (as is evident from his letter to Paoli; dated June, langues dans des collèges et des familles, souhaite obtenir de l'emploi. Those objects excite the deepest regret which give scope to the imagination, not those which satisfy it. His attachment to Corsica must have been strong since he fancied at one time it might afford him a final tefuge from his enemies. He repelled with indignation the sarcasm thrown out by some writer, that "the French had sought an emperor among a people whom the Romans had refused to receive for slaves." This, which was meant for satire, was in fact a compliment. Their unwillingness to serve did not make them unfit to rule.-Yet the French themselves sometimes affect to throw the blame of Bonaparte's ambition, and of all their misfortunes (which they say he brought
