SCHOOLS.

COLLEGE OF VERSAILLES, AT THE OLD PLANTATION OF SAUNIER.—The, residents of New Orleans and the neighbourhood have long since felt the want of a public seminary of learning, which they unfortunately find, without the inconvenience of frequently withdrawing them.

There are certainly colleges in the state which offer superior advantages to families, and yet many parents are too remote to permit parents to visit their children, as often as they wish, or to afford to spend, of expense, or time, or to have the children accompanied from their college to by some person, or to send from their College to parents.

To remedy these inconveniences, the institution, of which, we are to speak, is located, several miles out of town, and yet sufficiently near to be visited by the parents of the pupils, and yet so far off that they could not choose a boarding house than that which is the residence of Versailles. Among other reasons for the selection of Versailles, I may mention the salubrity of the spot, as every body knows that there is not a more healthy position in Louisiana. It is equally distant, from the Lake and from Orleans, and of course it is accessible to the Lake, and to the city, at all times, and that inducers may easily be procured who will be pleased to visit it every Sunday, especially when the weather shall be finished.

As the success of every establishment, especially depends on the ability of him who directs it, the public will be pleased to learn that Mr. L. CARDINE, who from his young years, has devoted his life to instructing a college, which has given general satisfaction, is the proprietor of Versailles. Mr. Cardine has appeared to possess the property, which is required to be acquired by them. In the six years, during which he has resided in New Orleans, he has become familiar with the manners, and habits, and parents acquainted with our children, he is acquainted with the character of the young English, and will not have to acquire the knowledge of the manners, and habits of the young French, which would be bestowed by strangers to their habits and manners. Finally, Mr. Cardine has a flourishing institution, and it is certain that the college of Versailles will open with at least three scholars, all of whom know him, and are habituated to their disciplinable without which he improvements can be expected.

In order that every one may be enabled to judge beyond doubt of the advantages offered by the College of Versailles, we have thought it advisable to insert the plan of the College, and the means of carrying the step which he proposes to perform.

The following is an outline which is the shortest that he could adopt, intended for the use of the public in the prospectus which he intends to publish.

The different branches of education are: The English, French, Spanish, Latin, Greek, history, geography, astronomy, chemistry, natural history, philosophy, chemistry, natural history, geology, elements of the political economy, law, drawing, calligraphy, all branches of mathematics, and the whole course of the institution, after having passed the schools of mathematics, law, war, art, science, philosophy, &c. &c. &c.

There will also be a department specially devoted to commerce, regarded a small addition to make to the price of boarding, which will be $300.

The scholars will wear an uniform.

A dance will occupy one the hours.

In order to preserve the physical constitutions of the pupils, there will be a course of gymnastic exercises, to promote their activity and strength.

There will be taught the use of small arms on foot and on horseback.

There will be a school of equitation.

There will also be a swimming school, and every evening during the hot season the pupils will be before retiring to rest.

The different exercises will at the same time be a source of variety and pleasure to the pupils, and participate at them will induce them to fulfil their duties with a zeal inside, in order to merit that privilege, which is reserved for similar attempts, and children from an a small scale.

An entertainment ball will be appropriated to recreations during bad weather.

Any great inconveniences might arise from mixing small children with those of a more mature age, they will be kept entirely separate, classes, places of repose, refectories, dormitories, amusements, will all be preserved distinct and apart.

In order to correct such as may transgress the rules necessary to be observed, in a regular school, a punishment which cannot injure to reduce the honest feeling without inducting on the culprit the infamy reputation from conformity to a prison or a dungeon. For this purpose a house will be erected in the College, the institution, entirely separate from the other building, which will not submit to the established discipline, and which will be under the superintendence of a master, who will never absent himself. In that house they will eat, sleep, and study, though the same studies of the other, which will receive salutary counsel, and will not be permitted to leave it, until they shall be thought worthy of rejoining the great society of the College. That house will be styled the house of repentance.

By the means they will never be in the necessity of dismissing a scholar from the college, a powerful consideration with parents, who will not have to fear such a disgrace.

In order that families may not be obliged to separate themselves from their children in facilitate the study of the English tongue, independent of the common,
