THE FRENCH OPERA .- We have seldom spent an evening with greater satisfaction than we derived from the Operatic performances at the Federal street Theatre, on Thursday evening. We are not ou failin the French language, sufficiently to enjoy the sentiment of the piece; but music is a universal language, and of whatever nation may be its birth, it speaks to the soul of the whole human family; and it is but moderate praise to say, that we have never before heard so good theatrical music. people will ratify it.

We cannot, of course, institute a comparison, between this and the companies of European cities, which we have not seen, but we have not observed so high a degree of skill exhibited by any Theatrical Corps, in every departement, as ture of Cotton, which is now unprofitwas displayed by this Company. There able, and like to be more so, and to turn was an one of deportment, a readiness their attention to the introduction of et Arrand Beauvais, ses cautions -le 26 Pévrier of execution in the dialogue, and a faci-1876, conjointement avec Charles Morgan et Vin- lity of adaptation: as far as we could understand, throughout the acting partially or altogether one of those which has been a stranger to our boards; ments of the musical scenes, bespoke great talent and much practise of a secompare with the flowing facility, the natural air of this rerformance.

> The onehestra is skillful and well disciplined. The efforts of all are made to contribute, not to a personal display of excellence, but to the general effect And through every passage a strict-regard is had to a just style of execution. The graces of individual fancy are not allowed, but a rigid performance of the composition of the picce is the main object of every ones. The advantage of such a style is felt, and the contrast with what we have been accustomed to have, is acknowledged, instantly; and would be even more apparent if display ed in the ordinary music of our English Operas, which are in no way comparable with the magnificent productions of the French masters.

> From the N: Y. American. To the Address of the Young Men's Convention we refer with particular satisfaction, both as it enforces with eloquence and vigor the importance to the character and duration of our free institutions, of preserving the first civil office in the world from the soldfer's grasp, and as it speaks, in belitting language, the generous and devoted feetings of the future legislators and states-men of New-York. This active interposition of the young men, as a class, in the politics of the day, is, is a great degree, a novelty-it is the natural resuit however of the committion of our political-stairs. "The party," as the combination of the Argus, the Evening Post and the Enquirer, and of the hitherto conflicting and most bitterly opposed partizans whom they may be supposed to represent—is called—has become so intolerant and presumptuous -it so entirely aims at precluding all exercise of individual opinion, and is so prone to the sweeping denunciation of all who will not bow down to every new idol, its leaders find It for their in successeur de feu terest to set up-that the younger men, who coming into active life in a period of political calm, when the nation was united as one man on all the leading principles of government, and looking in vain for the distinctions of opinion which it is pretented, separates one class of citizens from another; when they still see, that by virtue of these presended distinctions, and of the force of names alone, a great positive wrong is meditated against the general cause > Homicide. - A constable in Conway county, Arkansas, named Carter, having trached some property of a man named Rogers, was proceeding to sell it a few days after, when Rogers armed himself with a knife and threatened, to kill him if he did not desist. Carter showed much forbearance and suffered himself to be run off two or thee times; as a last resort, to save his own life, he he was compelled to shoot Rogers. He has demanded a legal investiga-subject of his political economy. "Our 'Great Untaught,' last night knocked about theories as he did Frenchmen at Waterloo. The measure of 1826 (he said) was not founded on any theory, but on experience, which the few last years had confirmed; while that experience had proved the fallacy of another theory —a theory which stated that a paper currency was perfectly safe as long as it was convertible into gold. Experience during the last few years had proved this not to be true. It had likewise proved another theory not true—that theory, that one pound notes and sovereigns could circulate together.'—What a rot among the theories! His Grace has a compendious way of disposing of theories. He reminds un of another great warrior, who, late in life, chose to distinguish himself in another science—the late Mr. Antley of the Amphitheatre.
