☞ A gentleman of respectability has shown us a letter from the parish of St. John Baptist, which states that on the first day's election, there were polled only votes, nine of which were for the good cause, and four for Jackson.

Yesterday's election [illegible] the Administration about [illegible] votes. In many parishes the Jackson ticket may become [illegible] certainty of success, we would remind [illegible] have a wily enemy to contend with, who is even ready to profit by circumstances, therefore we must not relax from our [illegible] and already the general exertions, [illegible] are still a handsome majority which [illegible] the State will prove to our opponents that we can beat them as roundly now [illegible] last.

THE SWORD AND THE PEN.

It happened on [illegible] occasion that a Sword and a Pen, which were lying near to each other in an apartment of a large house, [illegible] into conversation together, in which each of them endeavored to magnify its own importance. "I would [illegible] the Sword, "that you pretend to compare yourself with me." [illegible] our country from her enemies, conquered foreign foes, and preserved the government from domestic traitors? Does not the glory of the nation depend altogether upon me, and without me what would become even of its independence? Men may say they wish you [illegible] but, in truth, out me there would be but perpetual anarchy. Surely then I am better entitled than you to the chief place in this house." "I grant," replied the Pen, "that you have performed warlike services, and [illegible] so long as wars and [illegible] continue, there will be occasion for your assistance. But men are not always at war; and in times of peace of what use are you? You can neither dig the garden like a spade, nor turn up [illegible] or serve like a needle. Besides you are quite as often used against your own country as in its defence. How many times have you not been drawn against the liberator of your country! How often have you [illegible] the sceptre of tyranny! How many slaves and [illegible] clothed in coarse [illegible] exercise of authority! (Here the Sword started [illegible] ed.) "Peace, I say, I wish to hear no more of your boasting. I have the pen, and therefore, shall set down all particulars of certain passages of your life. For my own part I do not [illegible] account of my own [illegible] I must here [illegible] where you confer [illegible] follow [illegible] glorious [illegible] afraid of [illegible] that they keep [illegible] secret what there is [illegible] as [illegible] By my [illegible] keep alive the spirit of liberty [illegible] first [illegible] of men [illegible] it.
