A letter from Kalrasch, on the Lower Danube, copied from a Nuremburg paper on the whole, partial to the Russians—paints their sufferings in colours fully as sombre as the letter from Semlin-describes them as literally familsoed-and preserving in their fight not the least vestige of order or subordination. According to his accountmonly a very small portion of the army directed its course towards Moldavia, the far greater number striving to reach Bessarabia by way of Hirsova and Isaksuthus abandoning the two Principalities to the Turks, who will probably make the best use # the advantage bus unexpectedly presented to them.

Several merchants in the neighbouring States had sent travellers to Jassy to make themselves acquainted with the wants of the Russian troops. Out of sixteen souls on board, the master, six p (including Col. Coquelin, of the French marines, and his daughter an intesting young lady, only 12 years of age, and neice to Josephine, ci-devant Empress of France), and six scamen were providentially saved. Eight of the bodies have been found, and decently interred in Pembry church-yard, the colonel and daughter in one grave; and every attention paid to the distressed survivors by R. J. Neville, Esq., of Llanelly, the French consul for that Port. The conduct of some of the wreckers on this lamentable occasion is represented as being highly disgraceful before the staff of the Carmarthen militia could arrive at the scene of distress, pilfering every thing which came on shore; and a shameful instance is related to us of a tradesman from a neighbouring town, who, havinglon Sunday morning last, found a cask of rum on the shore, stove in its head, and with his snuff-box drank himself into a state of intexication, and afterwards busted of the feat!
