

MR. ANDRE LABAT croit devoir donner avis de son prochain départ pour France et pour l'Angleterre, et prévenir les personnes qui désiraient le charger de quelques commissions, qu'il recevra tous leurs ordres, et principalement ceux qui auraient rapport à l'achat de pianos tant Anglais que Français. La connaissance et l'habitude qu'a M. Labat de ces instruments, le commerce qu'il en a fait pendant quatorze ans le rendent tout particulièrement propre à en surveiller le choix et son prochain retour est un sûr garant de l'expédition qui sera mise à exécution l'après-midi.

Le départ de Mr. Labat est fixé au 20 courant et son retour à la mi-Novembre prochain. Toutes communications devront être faites par écrit sous adresse de Mr. Labat à la poste de cette ville, et il se rendra immédiatement auprès des personnes qui se seront ainsi adressées. 7 avril Consumption of Cotton.—In 1819 the consumption of cotton in Great Britain was, 428,500 bales; in 1822, 550,000; in 1825, 650,940; in 1827, 662,900; and in 1828, 732,700. By this statement it appears, that the consumption has nearly doubled within the last ten years. When 35 years ago, Mr. Jay made his treaty with Great Britain, Cotton was not enumerated among the articles produced in or exported from the United States.—N. Y. Jour Com.

American Enterprise.—The January number of the Oriental Herald, a magazine, specially devoted to the affairs of India, published in London by Mr. Buckingham, author of "Travels in Assyria, Media, Persia," &c. speaks in glowing terms of "the merchant mariners of America." "To engage in the trade to China and the Eastern Islands," says the editor, "with any prospect of advantage, it is necessary to be free from all descriptions of restraint—that every sea should be open to our merchants; every port be familiarized with our flag—that as far as least as our own laws can ensure it, we should have unqualified access to every nation of the earth—be confined to no prescribed routes, detained to no ancient stations, but at liberty to sail where we will, to return which way we please, and to stay as long as our exigencies may require. Be it remembered that we have not to compete with the old, worn out nations of the continent. A new people—thirty years ago—in the gristle, but now hardened into the bone of manhood, are our bold and adventurous rivals. Distinguished by an energy of character, an indomitable spirit of perseverance, to be dismayed by no difficulties, discouraged by no delay, free as the winds of the immense oceans which bound their coasts, the merchant-mariners of AMERICA seem insensible to fatigue, seek no repose—but are engaged in one uninterrupted circumnavigation of commercial enterprise. "Whilst we follow them," says Burke, "among the trembling mountains of ice, and behold them penetrating into the deepest frozen recesses of Hudson's Bay and Davis's Straits—whilst we are looking for them between the arctic circle, we hear that they have pierced into the opposite region of polar cold—that they are at the antipodes, and engaged under the frozen serpent of the South-Falkland Island, which seemed too remote and romantic an object for the grasp of national ambition, is but a stage and resting-place in the progress of their victorious industry. Nor is the equinoctial heat more discouraging to them than the accumulated winter of both the poles. We know—that, whilst some of them draw the line and strike the harpoon on the east of Africa, others run the longitude and pursue their gigantic game along the coast of Brazil. No sea but what is vexed by their fisheries—no climate that is not witness to their unceasing toils." Such was the portrait of America in her infancy, while yet in the nursery of Great Britain. Since that time, whatever may look like poetry in the description, has been more than realized. Not "squeezed," as we have been, "by the restraints of a watchful and suspicious government," but suffered to take their own way to perfection, the Americans, under cover of our own mischievous restrictions, by the excellence and variety of their assortments, have obtained a preference over us in all the ports of continental Europe, engrossed the better portion of the trade with the immense regions which lie beyond the Cape of Good-Hope, and Straits of Magellan, and, pushing their success to the Thames, selected from the warehouses, in which our manufactures mouldered, the materials which invigorate their competition, and extend and animate their foreign and domestic commerce.

threatened if she touched bottom he would be shot; that he carried the schooner, when the Captain observed that, as his (Captain H's) boat was better than his own, and he wanted a few more men, he would take him along. The wrecking schr. Thistle was then in pursuit, and learning from Capt. H. that she was an armed schooner, the piratical Captain determined to liberate him, paying fifty dollars for his pilotage.

Captain Houseman also describes the piratical vessel to be a Baltimore built schooner, carrying a foretop-sail and a long gun midship; but without a name on her stern, and manned with fifty persons: officers and men all Spaniards. He could not learn the name of the captain, but the latter reported his having left Havana the day before, bound to one of the ports of the east end of Cuba. Her decks were filled with fish which indicated that she was a cruiser and had been fishing. One of the officers on deck was dressed in the Mexican uniform.

Captain Houseman concluded that she had been chased inside the Reefs, across from the Key Sal Bank by the U. S. Cutter, Captain Jackson, which had left Key West a few days previously, in pursuit, and which appeared a little off Key Tavenier, taking to the northward and southward.

Lamentable Death of Sanderson, the Poet.—It is this week our painful duty to record the death of Mr. Thomas Sanderson, of Kirklington, under circumstances of the most shocking description. Mr. Sanderson lived by himself in a small cottage, consisting of only one room and a sort of passage or closet in which his bed stood. In the principal room all his papers were usually strewn about the floor, and in different parts of it were quantities of sticks and faggots of wood used for his fire. He had been up reading or writing to rather a late hour, and on retiring to bed left a few sticks burning in his grate. Soon afterwards, by the falling of a stick from the fireplace, some of his papers caught fire, which was speedily communicated to the various combustible materials which lay in confused masses around. The fire would, of course, spread with rapidity, and soon made its way into the place where Mr. Sanderson slept. The smoke and the crackling of the flames, as they spread desolation around, awoke him, and he got out of bed and made an attempt to escape by the door, but ere he could accomplish his object, he fell upon the floor, overcome by the smoke and scorched by the flames! How long he may have lain in this horrible state is not known. The fire was discovered by the neighbours, and the most prompt assistance was given. Mr. Sanderson was found lying near the door, his shirt burned off, and his body dreadfully scorched and blackened. He was taken out into the fresh air, and laid upon the grass, where he soon exhibited signs of returning animation, and was then carried to a neighbor's house and put to bed. Here he recovered so far as to be able to speak, and gave some account of what he supposed led to the deplorable accident. His sufferings were dreadful, and he lingered till the following evening, when he expired, and was interred at Kirklington on Sunday last. Mr. Sanderson was about 70 years of age. [English paper.]
