The sugar produced by this process is increased at least 25 per cent in weight and 25 per cent in value over that obtained by the common process. The molasses does not exceed 25 per cent, but is of a very superior quality. The sugar is made white by the use of coarse bone black, without employing muddle or liquoring. The saving of fuel is another important consideration. The bagasse when dry, properly preserved is sufficient to make the crop of sugar—and if bagasse is not used, one cord of wood per hogshead is more sufficient—the only fuel being in the bagasse of the steam engine. This new method of sugar making is no longer an experiment, as may be seen by reference to the letter of T. J. Parkwood, Esq., published in the Rec of Feb'y 10th, and in the Plantation Journal, Tropic, Picayune and New Orleans Price Current of 17th Feb'y, on whose plantation it has been erected, and proved to his entire satisfaction.
Orders received until the end of April.
