This method has proved a valuable acquisi tion; for pupils, even not acquainted with the grammatical principles of any language, and only gifted with a certain knowledge, can become magner of a fereign language without burthen-ing their memory, and taking more time for their studies than that required for their usual lessons under the preceptor.

The course of each language is divided into three sections of thirty lessons each. At the end of the first section, the scholler will have bearned the rules of pronunciation, orthography and the general principles of grammar, so as to continue his studies, if he pleases, without the further assistance of a master.

At the end of the second section, he will have acquired syntax, with all the exceptions to the general rules of the declinable parts of speech inderstand well all that he reads, and he able to annslate the language he studies into his own.
At the end of the third section, he will have studied correct phraseology, will write and speak well, and even understand those who speak with much rapidity, and translate elegantly his own language into the one he studies.

The scholar being at liberty to quit his class whenever he deems it proper.
