NEW-ORLEANS.
TUESDAY, (MORNING,) FEBRUARY 1, 1831.

No northern mail was received yesterday. Failures are becoming so much a matter of course, we shall presently begin to notice arrivals, as the rarer sort of occurrences.

In pursuance of previous arrangements, the inauguration of his Excellency A. B. Roman, as Governor of the State of Louisiana, took place yesterday at 12 o'clock, in presence of both houses of the Legislature, officers of the United States Army and Navy, officers of the Louisiana Legion and militia of the State, the civil authorities of this City, and a large concourse of citizens. His speech is said to have been long; but we have nevertheless heard it spoken of in terms of high commendation. As soon as we shall be able to obtain a copy, it shall be laid before our readers.

We were apprised on Saturday of the arrest of two individuals, called David and James Brown, charged with having put in circulation counterfeit notes purporting to be of the Bank of the United States, payable at the branch at New York and the mother bank in Philadelphia. We however abstained from noticing the fact, at the suggestion of the paying clerk of the Branch Bank in this city, who thought with reason, that giving publicity to the matter might tend to put others engaged in the traffic upon their guard and prevent their apprehension.

There was found upon them, we understand, about $9,000 in genuine notes; which gives reason to suspect that they may have succeeded in passing an equal, and perhaps a larger amount, of spurious bills. They had also in their possession, upwards of $40,000 of the counterfeit notes above mentioned.

Three other individuals have been subsequently arrested on suspicion, but no counterfeit notes were found upon them: they will undergo an examination to-day.

These counterfeit notes are said to be exceedingly well executed, and they are with difficulty detected by good judges. Almost the only difference observable between the good and the bad, is in the paper.

Great credit is due to Mr. John Bertrand, paying Clerk of the Branch Bank in this city, to whose indefatigable exertions the public is indebted for the detection and apprehension of these villains.

[From the Georgia Journal.]

Our Indian Affairs are rapidly approaching a crisis—The reader will remember the resolutions adopted in consequence of the citation served upon the Governor, as published in our last paper. In obedience to the last of them, and express was dispatched to Hall country, at 12 o'clock, on the night of their passage, and reached the sheriff on the day appointed for the execution of Tassels. Eberhart, the Sheriff of Hall county, had been served with a citation from the Supreme Court of the United States, which he had determined to disregard, even if he had received no instructions from the State authority. —Tassels was hung pursuant to his sentence.

During the past week the Governor received the following letter by special messenger :—

Head of Coosa, Cherokee Nation, December 20th 1830.

To his Excellency GEORGE R. GILMER;
Governor of the state of Georgia:

Sir—You will please to take notice, that on Saturday the fifth day of March next, at the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia, the Cherokee Nation will, by their Counsel, move the Supreme Court of the United States, which is expected to be then and there in session, for an injunction to restrain the State of Georgia, the Governor, Attorney General, Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs, Constables, and all the other officers, agents and servants of that State, from executing and enforcing the laws of Georgia, or any of those laws, or serving process, or doing any thing towards the execution and enforcement of those laws within the Cherokee Territory, as designated by treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation! The motion will be made on the grounds set forth in the bill, a copy of which will be handed to you with this notice, which bill will be supported by the necessary affidavits and documents.

JOHN ROSS.
Principal Cheif of the Cherokee Nation.

[From the Cincinnati American.]

OUR CITY.

"Thirty-five years ago, over all that is now Ohio, there stretched one vast wilderness, unbroken, except by the small spots of civilized culture, the one at Marietta, and the other at Cincinnati. At these little openings, hardly each a pin's point upon the map, the arm of the frontiersman had levelled the forest and let in the sun."

These are the words of Daniel Webster, in his first speech on "Foot's Resolution." They usher in a splendid description of the wonderful transformation of the territory that now constitutes the State of Ohio, from a wilderness in which dwelt savage men, and savage beasts, into a magnificient abode of civilization, opulence, taste and power. It has a merit rare in such gorgeous paintings;—it is a perfect breathing image of what has been. The description was moulded upon facts, and took their exact shape. Lofty and grand though it be, it cannot be grander or loftier than the scene it pictures.

Thirty five years ago, our city was, as he said it was, a little opening in a vast, unbroken forest. And what is it now? Let us look around us. Let us walk around Cincinnati and take note of what we see. First, there is the Great Landing, slooping down from Front street to the waters edge, a declevity of between 60 and 80 feet in perpendicular elevation, and reaching along the river more than two whole squares.—The noble stream is up now, and a part of this immense work is hidden from view. Yet enough is visible to show that it would be a difficult matter to find a structure like it any where. If the rise of water hides the Landing, it shows the Steamboats for the use of which the Landing was made. There they are, of a stately structure, fitting the river, on whose bosom they rush along, and the mighty territory whose productions they carry to a distant market. As if Providence had designed this spot for their use, the river, generally careering on with a rapid current, here sweeps round in an eddy, and thus forms a natural harbor, as it were, for them.—They are discharging and receiving their cargoes; to-morrow almost every one of them will be gone, and their places will be filled by others.

As we proceed eastward, coming up in the city a little, our ears are greeted with the sound of busy occupation, and our eyes with the sight of the numerous factories. There are the steam-mill, and the cotton factories, and the saw-mill factories, and the engine factories, and others that we have not room to enumerate. Here is the principal source of wealth and prosperity of our city. It is labor that gives value to every thing. The raw material is worthless till it is wrought. What purpose serves the iron in the earth? What good does the cotton are in be gathered? Labor must be applied before value can be created. Ever since the decree went forth, "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," little has been the worth of the earth's spontaneous productions, and as it will be ever. Where the sweat of the face is, there will be bread; and where the laborious population is, there will be the prosperous city and the flourishing empire. We do not mean to assert, that all our vigorous growth and early maturity is due to mechanic labor alone. Commerce has had its share, and other causes have had their share of influence in operating the grand result. We only intend to say, that mechanic labor has been the principal, not the sole agent of the prosperity of the city.

We pass on eastward until we come to the water-works, and then climb the hill that lies just down upon the river, until we attain a commanding position for a panoramic view of the valley, the first thought that strikes us is, that this spot must have been marked out for a high destiny in the councils of Heaven. That wide amphitheatre below must surely have been scooped out on purpose to be the seat of a great city.—On all sides it is guarded by the everlasting hills, which seem from this point to be arrayed around the whole valley, in the form of an elipsis. We see La belle Riviere entering it from the North East. It sweeps round in a beautiful curve, and we see it again far off and seeming like a zone of silver, binding Nature's verdant apparelling, gliding away tranquilly towards the mighty Mississippi. From the North and South several small streams are seen pouring in their scanty tribute. The Canal comes in from the North, and is covered with boats. We close our eyes for a moment and listen. We hear from the river the roaring of the stream: from the Canal the notes of the bugle; and from the entire city, that confused noise of the rattling of wheels and the jar of machines, and the clamor of voices, which always indicate the presence of a multitudinous population. We open our eyes again, and we almost imagine that we see the city grow. We do see all the symptoms of vigorous growth. There are Factories more than we saw when in the valley, and in every part of the city. There are many churches, some of them grand in their proportions, and splendid in their architecture. There are the residence of some of our private citizens that show like palaces, there are extending streets and multiplying erections of every description on the two levels that, with the connecting declevity between them, form the area of this vast ampitheatre. There are the markets, not quite so neat fabrics as they might be, but filled to overflowing with the abundance of the surrounding country, and crowded by the great multitude who live to eat or eat to live.—There too, is not—alas! that we must say so—a City Hall, worthy of the greatness and opulence of our city.

Having now cast a general and rapid glance over the scene before us, we descend the hill, we meet with men not yet past the prime of life, who tell us that when they were boys, they used to gather grapes and hunt squirles and wild turkeys over the very spot where these thick-crowding edifices now stand!

This is a faithful outline of Cincinnati, as she now is. We intended, when we began, to sketch, in the same brief way, her history and character and prospects; to speak somewhat of the inducements held out to emigrants, and to say what classes of men would probably find advantage in coming here; but we have no room to do all this now. Perhaps we may resume the subject in our next or some future number. In the mean time, we may observe that we do not expect to edify our city friends with a description of what they see every day; but to gratify the natural curiosity of those who, living at some distance from us, have frequently expressed a wish to know something more about Cincinnati than they could learn from the Geographies.

VIEWS OF THE BRITISH MINISTRY.

Few of our well-informed readers (observes the National Intelligencer) will be at any loss for the source of the following article. To those who may not have the information to enable them to designate it so certainly, we can only assure them, from its internal evidence, that it is of the highest authority; from the pen of an American,* who has travelled to more purpose, with reference to a clear understanding of the character of the English Government and English Statesmen of the present day, than perhaps any one of our citizens who has been abroad :

(From the York (Pa.) Republican)

Mr. EDITOR—Let me offer you a few words on the change of Ministry in England, of which I have just finished reading the account.

We must not suppose the reign of aristocracy to be at an end, or even that its influence will be likely to grow less in that country, by the change.

There is not in all England, or in Europe, a more lofty aristocrat than Earl Grey, though at the head of the Whigs.

I will mention a single fact at present. In 1818, at a dinner given in honor of Mr. Fox, at Newcastle, Grey, as one of the speakers, was not satisfied with simply denouncing annual parliaments and universal suffrage, which Sir Francis Burdett, Major Cartwright, (Mr. Jefferson's correspondent) and others of that party, were contending for; but so desirous did he appear not to fall under the least suspicion of republicanism, that he went out of his way to express this disapprobation of the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and to inveigh against what he called our impure and corrupt elections in this country.

Then, in this new Whig Ministry, we have as Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Althorp, son of Earl Spencer, a nobleman of like high bearing with Earl Grey, in place of Mr. Goulburn: as home secretary, Lord Melbourn in place of Robert Peel, the son of a manufacturer: as colonial secretary, Lord Goderich, another nobleman and the brother of a nobleman, Lord Grantham, in place of Sir George Murray: as master of the mint, Lord Auckland, in place of Mr. Herries: as chancellor of the Dueny of Lancaster, Lord Holland, in place of Mr. Arbuthnot: as pay-master of the forces, Lord John Russell, son of the Duke of Bedford, in place of Mr. Calcraft and so by going through the entire list, it will be seen that the new officers, with their connexions, show a remarkable predominance of noblemen over the late ministry, and of noblemen of ancient families.

In blood, it is more aristocratical than Lord Wellington's ministry, than Mr. Canning's, than Lord Liverpool's, or probably than that of any that has been formed in England for the last fifty years. It is very powerful in talents.

It stands so pledged, by a long course of opposition, to some reduction in the expenses of the Government, and some change in the representation in the House of Commons, that if it last long enough, which is doubtful, it cannot get off, and perhaps would not wish to; but the reduction and the changes, will be scrupulously under the safeguard of aristocracy.

Whoever expects that its administration, at home or abroad will, otherwise, take any other direction than that of aristocracy, and high aristocracy, will, I think, be disappointed.

I venture to predict, that this English Ministry will not side with France, in the great battle that is coming on in Europe, between the Kings and the People.
