NEW-ORLEANS,
SATURDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 25, 1832.

MAYOR
Col. PEIRE.
RECORDER
FELIX DE ARMAS.

The mail came in yesterday evening, at 8 o'clock, a few moments before the hour of closing the Post Office. We obtained six or seven of our papers; we have New York dates and Philadelphia of the 10th, and Boston of the 7th instant. The latest New-Orleans dates, at New York, were of the 22d of January. The following succinct account of the most recent European intelligence, at that port, we extract from the Commercial Advertiser:

Conviction of Murder.—The case of the State vs. Jose Saubeo, Manuel Farache, and Jacinto Fernandez, for the wilful murder of one Mayorquin, by the infliction of 33 wounds, came on yesterday for trial. The accused were put severally on their trial. By one o'clock A. M. his Honor Judge GRIMA summed up the evidence, and made a luminous charge to the Jury. The Jury withdrew, and returned at a quarter past one, with a verdict of guilty against Manuel Farache. He met the announcement of the Jury with unmoved indifference.

The Ohio.—Advices from Pittsburgh, brought by the steamer Baltic, state that on the 17th instant the waters of the Ohio suddenly swelled to such a height, that, on the falls they are already five feet higher than in 1815; it is also stated, that at the above date, the river continued rising one inch an hour, and that from Pittsburgh, as low down as Vicksburg, it has overflowed its banks and caused incalculable damage. The captain of the Baltic informs us that the water is strewn with floating wrecks, and that the losses, that have accrued from the freshet, are immense. The riparian inhabitants have taken refuge on the highlands. We may reasonably expect an early and terrible rising of the waters of the Mississippi.

The editor of the Louisiana, in a fruitless attempt to ward off the lash, which his imprudence has called down upon him, rails at what he terms our classical philippic, and hyperbolical style. Well, well;—to be classical may be "a thing to thank God on"—and again it may be a curse. The Louisiana has probably found it out. But to the point.—None but Bardolph could have seen a philippic in our answer to the unprovoked attack; we intended none in the justification. Let us try to make out a parity. We are no haranguer of the sea-shore, and Philip, though crafty and ambitious, was a man of superior sense: the editor of the Louisiana is not a Phillip of Macedon—ergo no philippic—no classicality. If to be classical and figurative be "to abound in all kinds of sense, except common sense," then the editor is, unwittingly, both classical and figurative—yea, classical as Bentley's commentaries, and figurative as a Persian gazelle.* Examine the classicism, more closely, and then pronounce. We said that the editor was imperviously mailed in his intrinsic nullity: is this classical? We explained the quality of contempt: is this hyperbolical?—We reminded him that he was advising the Mayor to give away his own goods and chattels—that contempt was his, imperscriptibly his: is this figurative? Will any one say that the latter is not the most *un*tropical, the least embellished explanation ever afforded? None will deny it; not even the editor himself. Before we close our remarks, we must do an act of justice, and make a handsome acknowledgement to the Louisiana. As a remuneration for giving him ten minutes of existence; for constituting an epoch in his editorial life, he has associated his and our name in a trueloversknot of nonsense. Tired with his unparticipated solitude of dulness; resolved to hold up, to the wonder of the world, "among God's creatures, two such things as we," he has doomed us to live in his heavy, indestructible, leaden article. This is revenge over-refined.

* Get this illustrated by your very literary scourger: it is not classical, we can assure you, most "learned Theban."

Lectures on Astronomy.—Mr. WHEELER, favorably known in the northern cities, by his astronomical disquisitions, has arrived in Orleans and intends delivering a course of lectures on the systems. We entertain no doubt, but the liberal citizens of this community will improve the occasion to patronize confessed merit.

SOME HOURS LATER FROM LONDON.—The packet ship Hannibal, captain Hebard, has arrived from London, bringing the London evening papers of the 31st December, and Portsmouth papers to the 2d January. The dates from the Continent are one day later than per last advices, but nothing of particular interest has transpired. An important conference was held at the foreign office, on the 30th of December, and couriers were despatched by Lord Palmerston on the day following, to the courts of Berlin and Vienna, with instructions to make the most diligent haste. The dispatches with which they were charged, are presumed to relate to the proposed treaty of Peace between Holland and Belgium—the ratification of which, according to the Protocol of the Five powers, are to be exchanged on the 16th of January. Meantime the Courier, at 4 o'clock in the evening of the 31st, announces an express from the Hague, with intelligence that "the States General have voted, by an immense majority, (viz: 52 against 8,) the extraordinary funds required by the government, in order to meet the probable war expenditures for 1831."

In the dearth of news, we handed over the following confession of Bishop, the Burker, to our compositor before the arrival of the mail. It unfolds a calculated system of murder, which has astonished England, and has been deemed of sufficient importance to call for parliamentary interference. We hope that it will not be uninteresting to our readers:

From the London Herald,
THE BURKITES.

Confession of the Murderers.

"NEWGATE, Dec. 4, 1831.

"I, John Bishop, do hereby declare and confess that the boy supposed to be the Italian boy was a Lincolnshire boy. I and Williams took him to my house about half past ten o'clock on the Thursday night, the 3d of November, from the Bell, in Smithfield. He walked home with us. Williams promised to give him some work. Williams went with him from the Bell to the Old Bailey watering house, whilst I went to the Fortune of War. Williams came from the Old Bailey watering house to the Fortune of War for me, leaving the boy standing at the corner of the court by the watering house in the Old Bailey. I went directly with Williams to the boy, and we walked then all three to Nova Scotia gardens, taking a pint of stout at a public house near Holloway lane, Shoreditch, on our way, of which we gave the boy a part. We only stayed just to drink it, and walked on to my house, where we arrived at about 11 o'clock. My wife and children and Mrs. Williams were not gone to bed, so we put him in the privy, and told him to wait there for us. Williams went in and told them to go to bed, and I stayed in the garden. Williams came out directly, and we both walked out of the garden a little way to give time for the family getting to bed; we returned in about 10 minutes or a quarter of an hour, and listened outside at the window to ascertain whether the family were gone to bed. All was quiet, and we then went to the boy in the privy, and took him into the house; we lighted a candle, and gave the boy some bread and cheese, and, after he had eaten, we gave him a cup-full of rum, with about half a small phial of laudanum in it. (I had bought the rum the same evening at the Three Tuns, in Smithfield, and the laudanum also, in small quantities, at different shops.) There was no water or other liquid put in the cup with the rum and laudanum. The boy drank the contents of the cup directly in two draughts, and afterwards a little beer. In about 10 minutes he fell asleep on the chair on which he sat, and I removed him from the chair to the floor, and laid him on his side. We then went out and left him there. We had a quartern of gin and a pint of beer at the Feathers, near Shoreditch church, and then went home again, having been away from the boy about 20 minutes. We found him asleep as we had left him. We took him directly—asleep and insensible—into the garden, and tied a cord to his feet, to enable us to pull him up by, and I then took him to my arms, and let him slide from them headlong into the well in the garden; whilst Williams held the cord to prevent the body going altogether too low in the well. He was nearly wholly in the water of the well—his feet just above the surface. Williams fastened the other end of the cord round the paling, to prevent the body getting beyond our reach. The boy struggled a little with his arms and legs in the water, and the water bubbled for a minute. We waited till these symptoms were past, and then went in doors, and afterwards I think we went out, and walked down Shoreditch to occupy the time, and in about three quarters of an hour we returned and took him out of the well, by pulling him by the cord attached to his feet; we undressed him in the paved yard, rolled his clothes up, and buried them where they were found by the witness who produced them. We carried the boy into the wash house, laid him on the floor, and covered him over with a bag. We left him there, and went and had some coffee in Old street road, and then (a little before two in the morning of Friday) went back to my house. We immediately doubled the body up, and put it into a box, which we corded so that nobody might open it to see what was in it; and then went again, and had some more coffee at the same place in Old street road, where we staid a little while, and then went home to bed—both in the same house, and to our own beds as usual. We slept till about ten o'clock on Friday morning, when we got up—took breakfast together with the family, and then went both of us to Smithfield, to the Fortune of War. We had something to eat and drink there, and after we had been there about half an hour May came in. I knew May, but had not seen him for about a fortnight before—he had some rum with me at the bar, Williams remaining in the tap room; May and I went to the door; I had a smock frock on, and May asked me where I had bought it—I told him "in Field lane," he said he wanted to buy one, and asked me to go with him; I went with him to Field lane, where he bought a frock at the corner shop; we then went into a clothes' shop in West street to buy a pair of breeches, but May could not agree about the price; May was rather in liquor, and sent out for some rum which we and the woman drank together; May said he would treat her, because he had given her a good deal of trouble for nothing. We then returned to the Fortune of War, and joined Williams, and had something more to drink; we waited there a short time, and then Williams and I went to the west end of the town, leaving May at the Fortune of War. Williams and I went to Mr. Tuson's in Windmill street, where I saw mr. Tuson, and offered to sell him a subject—meaning the boy we had left at home. He said he had waited so long for a subject which I had before undertaken to procure, that he had been obliged to buy one the day before. We went from there to Mr. Carpue's in Dean's eet, and offered it to him in the lecture room with other gentlemen. They asked me if it was fresh? I told him yes. They told me to wait. I asked them 10 guineas, and, after waiting a little, a gentleman there said they would give 8 guineas, which I agreed to take, and engaged to carry it there the next morning at 10 o'clock. I and Williams then returned to the Fortune of War, we found May in the tap room; this was about a quarter before four o'clock in the afternoon. We had something to drink again, and I called May out to the outside of the house, and asked what was the best price given for things? He said he had sold two the day before for 10 guineas each, I think. I told him I had a subject. He asked me what sort of one? I said, a boy about 14 years old, and that I had been offered 8 guineas for it. He said, if it was his, he would not take it; he could sell it where he sold his former. I told him that all he could get above 9 guineas he might have for himself; we agreed to go presently and get a coach. I and May then went to the bar, and had something more to drink; and then, leaving Williams at the Fortune of War, we went and tried to hire a cab in the Old Bailey; the cabman was at tea at the watering house, and we went in and spoke to him about a fare, and had also tea there ourselves. Whilst we were at tea the cab driver went away, and we found him gone from the stand when we came out; we then went to Bridge street, Blackfriars, and asked a coachman if he would take such fare as we wanted; he refused, and we then went to Farringdon street, where we engaged a yellow chariot. I and May got in, drove to the Fortune of War, and Williams joined us by the George, in the Old Bailey, on our way. At the Fortune of War we drank something again, and then (about 6 o'clock) we all three went in the chariot to Nova Scotia gardens. We went into the wash house, where I uncorded the trunk and showed May the body. He asked, 'how are the teeth?' I said I had not looked at them. Williams went and fetched a brad awl from the house, and May took it and forced the teeth out. It is the constant practice to take the teeth out first, because, if the body be lost, the teeth are saved. After the teeth were taken out, we put the body in a bag and took it to the chariot. May and I carried the body, and Williams got first into the coach, and then assisted in pulling the body in. We all then drove off to Guy's Hospital, where we saw Mr. Davis, and offered to sell the body to him. He refused, saying that he had bought two the day before of May. I asked him to let us leave it there till the next morning. He consented, and we put it in a little room, the door of which Mr. Davis locked.

Williams was, during this, left with the chariot. I told Mr. Davis not to let the subject go to any body unless I was there, for it belonged to me, and May also told him not to let it go unless he was present, or else he should be money out of pocket. I understand this to mean the money paid by May for our teas at the old bailey (about 4s) and the coach fare, which we had agreed with the coachman should be 10s. May had no other interest or right to the money to be obtained for the body except for such payment, and for what he could get above nine guineas, as I had promised him. May paid the coachman 10s on our leaving the hospital, but, before we discharged the coach, May and I ran to Mr. Appleton, at Mr. Grainger's school, leaving Williams with the coach. We offered the subject to Mr. Appleton, but he declined to buy it, and May and I then joined Williams, discharged the coach, and went to a public house close by and had something to drink. After this we got into a coach in the Borough, and drove again to the Fortune of War, where we had something more to drink; this was eight o'clock in the evening; we all three stayed there about an hour, and then went out, got a coach in Smithfield and went towards old street road—stopped in golden lane with the coach, and drank something, and then on to old street. At the corner of old street (the star corner) May got out of the coach and said he was going home; and I and Williams drove to the corner of Union street, Kingsland-road, where we got out and paid the coach fare out of money lent to us by May (he having advanced to each of us 3s). We then walked home and went to bed that night as usual. We had agreed with May, on his leaving us, to meet him at Guy's hospital at 9 o'clock the next morning (Saturday). I and Williams went at 8 o'clock on Saturday morning to the Fortune of War, where we met Shields, the porter, and engaged him to go with us over the water to carry a subject. I asked him to go to St. Bartholomew's hospital for a hamper which I had seen there, he refused, and I fetched it myself. We had a pint of beer there, and I and Williams and Shields went to Guy's hospital, Shields carrying the hamper. We met May there. Williams and Shields went to a public house, whilst I and May went to Mr. Appleton, and offered him the subject again. He again refused to buy it, stating that he did not want it. May and I then joined Shields and Williams, and had some drink, and then left them again, crossed the water in a boat to the King's college, where we inquired of Mr. Hall, the porter, if he wanted a subject; he said he was not particularly in want, but would speak to Mr. Partridge, the demonstrator. Mr. Partridge came, and asked what the subject was. May said "a male subject." Mr. Partridge asked the price. May said "12 guineas." Mr. Partridge said he could not give so much, and went away. Mr. Hill asked us to stay a few minutes, whilst he went after Mr. Partridge to speak to him again. Hill returned, and said Mr. Partridge would give nine guineas. May said he would be damned if it should go under ten guineas. He was in liquor, and on his moving a little way off I took the opportunity of saying to Hill that he should come in at 9 guineas. I told May, directly after, that I had sold it for 9 guineas, and that I would not sell it pay him what I had of him, and give him something besides. We then got into a cabriolet, and went back to Williams and Shields at the public house, where all four had some beef steaks and beer; and afterwards went to Guy's hospital, packed the body in the hamper, and put it on Shield's head, telling him to take it to the King's college, where we went. Williams and Shields walking, and I and May riding part of the way in a cab. On reaching the King's college we carried the body into the theatre, and then into a little room, where we took the body out. Mr. Hill looked at it, and asked what it died of. May answered that he did not know, and it did not concern him. Mr. Hill asked how a cut, which was on his forehead, came. I told him that it was done by May throwing it out of the sack on the stones, which was the truth. Hill told us to remain in the other room, and he would bring in the money. We went into the other room and waited for some time, when Mr. Partridge came to us, and showed us a £50 note, and said he must go and get it changed, for he had not sufficient money without, and he pulled out his purse, and counted three or four sovereigns. I said he might let us have that, and he could give us the remainder on Monday. He said no, he would rather pay it all together, and went away. We waited some time, when the police officers came, and took us into custody. "JOHN BISHOP.

SALES AT AUCTION.
☞ Two columns of auction advertisements are in the first page.

SALE POSTPONED.
THE sale of the 300 LOTS of Ground, in Faubourg Washington, which was to have taken place this day is postponed on account of the plan not having been completed in time. It will positively take place on FRIDAY 2d, MARCH, and the days following until completed. feb 25.

300 Lots of Ground.
Sale of three hundred lots of ground, situated in Faubourg Washington, forming a part of the property which belonged formerly to the state, and offering in this respect every guarantee as regards the validity of title. Situated in Faubourg Washington, and adjoining the side of Mr. David Olivier's distillery.
HEWLETT & RASPILLIER.
WILL sell on Friday, 2d March, at 12 o'clock, the above mentioned lots, as per plan executed by Joseph Pilié, Esq. city surveyor, and exhibited at the Exchange coffee-house for the inspection of the public.
TERMS—One, two and three years, for notes bearing mortgage, and satisfactory endorsement required only in the first payment.
The rapid increase of business and of the population, which draws almost daily from the centre of the city, several branches of industry, a fact from which the lots now offered for sale as being of suitable dimensions, already derive an importance. Those facing the Levee offer a most desirable position for the erection of saw-mills, for a depot of staves, firewood, &c. and the breaking up of flat-boats. The lots situated in the rear are all very elevated, and one desirous of a pleasant country residence could not select a better site.
The project of establishing at a short distance from the river, between the city and Mr. Montgomery's plantation, a rail-road on a new plan, admitting at all times every description of vehicle, and the projected canal from the city to Lake Borgne, which will pass through these lots, are advantages which will give an increased value to the property, by drawing to this quarter a large proportion of the trade and industry, and thus developing the resources and facilities of a section of our city, bids fair to rank amongst the most flourishing. To those persons of enterprise who have realized such handsome profits in the upper faubourgs, and who have a confidence in the continued stability of our city, a better opportunity than the present to acquire further benefits, cannot be offered. feb 25
