New mode of closing a divided artery .- Is Galignani's Messenger of the 5th ult, we find an article translated from the Bulletin Generale de Therapentique giving an account of a styptic liquid discovered by two French physicians, Mesare. Talrich and Halma-Grand the effect of which is to check the effusion of blood in arteries which have been opened, to close the ori-free and to cause the wound to heal in a short time. These gentlemen are continuing these experiments, which it is said are more and more conclusive and in the mean time they have plation, which is to be opened when the expects grate.

ments now making with it by the inventers are finished. The Bulletin de Therapeutique is designed to contain accurate reports all the experiments made in the several hospitals of Paris and of the new medicines discovered from them. It appears on the 15th and 30th of each pariments made with the remedy of Talrich and Halma-Grand. N. Y. Ev. Post.

The carotid arteries of 15 sheep have been opened, four of which were cut lengthwise, and across, and from two of them an oval piece of the adostance has been taken out, and yet in four or five minutes, the effusion of od has been stopped, and in a few days after wards, the wound has been completely enled.

The same result followed a similar operation upon the carotid artery of a horse, a few days ago, at the Abattoin of Montfaucon. In order to stop the hemorriage, it is only necessary to apply a pledget of lint, saturated with the liquid ch it is not required to fasten round the neck, in order to prevent its falling off by its proper weight. In the last experiment half the lint minutes after its application while dropt off ten minutes after its application, the sheep was eating; and although a portion of was we renewed. was not renewed. The advantages of the discovery of a matter infallibly styptical are incalculable, and therefore it is artently to be desired that M. Talrich and M. Halma-Grand may be enabled to realise the expectation they have raised. It will not be with their liquid as with secret remedies, which lose all their virtues as coon as they become known. In this the effects will be at once proved—it will or it will not stop an effusion of blood—it will de it will not at once close the artery, and afterwards cause it to heal permenently. The effect is at once visible.
All the experiments, made under our own eyes, All the experiments, an additional and freely satisfactory. A recent fact that occurred within agr own practice, gives us an additional and freely prof of the efficacy of the remedy in queerfon. Experiment with Anthracite Coul.—It has been considered a great difficulty in burning the anthracite coals now extensively used in our Atlantic Cities, that the common fire places were not easily transformed into the proper receptateles for this fuel, nor grates easily adapted to the projections of the room and the requirements of the coal for producing the necessary amount of heat. It has been thought there must be some nice rule applied to the construction of the remaining 69 passengers of ship Mathracite Coul.—It has been difficulty in burning the armondal of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the construction of the coal for producing the necessary applied to the coal for producing the necessary Experiment with Anthracile Coul .- It has boat of about 120 tons, to be employed on the proportions of the room and the require-Detrois river and the western part of Lake Erica amount of the coal for producing the necessary. The grate made use of, was of a cylindrical form, swelled in the middle like a barrel, 15 inches in length; 12 inches the end and 16 inches the central ameter; the wires or bars two inches apart, running in a vertical direction. We have not mentioned the proportion of the grates, because precisely these were necessary to produce combus-tion; but movely to give a correct account of the experiment. A grate larger or smaller would have produced the same result.

This apparatus was susdenped int he open air in a yard for several days, both when there was a dead calm in the atmosphere, and when there was a slight breeze: and on every occasion, the coal ignited easily, and burned freely, steadily and handsomely, presenting a circular body of living fire, until the coal was nearly consumed. The experiment pleased all who witnessed its operation; and at the solicitation of many, it was publicly exhibited in Bowdoin Square, one evening, to a great number of spectators.
