I, who speak my mind honestly, do The standboat Amazon, of Pittsburg, J. Towne master, was such on the 21st Nov. in the river Mississippi, about 8 miles below Montgomery's Point, in the Arkansas Territory. After taking in wood at the shove place, she proceeded on her voyage, and in about five minutes after leaving the woodyard, it was discovered by a man in the forecastle that the water was coming into her very fast, information of which was done. She witcht files on a bar, on the left bank of the river, not half, a mile below the woodyard, and in less than ten minutes after the first notice we have not the making waters. Every possible example was made to find the left, but witched and so the rate of the research was made to find the left, but witched and so first, that in about 15 feet water, and her bow her steep sunk in a bout 15 feet water, and her bow her steep sunk in a bout 15 feet water, and her bow her steep sunk in a bout 15 feet water, and her bow her steep sunk in the sunk say, the present ministry, who are in power twelve months, have not as yet done any thing total seasons. The Amazon left this port of the New Orleans on the 16th ult. and was channel by the Louisville Marine and Fire Company, for 37,500, half her estimated value, the remaining half being probably ensured at some other office.

They say, that if the minutes set themselves avowedly to CREATE a majority, a creation of 41 or 50 or 60, will not suffice to put the matter begreat measure of reform; and when the great measure of the great measure o therto supported, and for every peer thus deserting, two new ones must be created—thus a deserting of twenty peers, which would, under such circumstances, not be unlikely, would aske twenty from the list of reformers, and add twenty to the anti-reformers, and render a creation of more than forty necessary to counterbalance the change. the list of reformers, and add twenty to the antireformers, and render a creation of more than forty necessary to counterbalance the change.

Thus it would appear that a creation of 36, or even 100 peers, would be requisite to make the result quite safe—if creation be the course alone relied on. And, in the way of this change, there is great danger, it is alleged, both for the present time and the future.

As to its present effects, they say, where are these peers to be found, except among the members at the House of Commons? And if 100, or 50, of the most instinguished members—the spectatissims —of the House of Commons be taken away, there would not be left a sufficiency of steady and experienced men to carry on the public business. It cannot be denied that this would be an inconsiderable evil.

But the precedent, too, they allare, is not with out the greatest danger; for if the peers may be created by a reforming ministry and an henest King, the same number may be created for an emergencyto by a Tory Minister, under a Tory Regency. The ministers, therefore, honestly regarding the conservation of the deliberative character of the Lords, as well as the restoration of the constitution of the Commons would not be inconsidered.

Thus it would appear that a creation of see, or sult quite safe—if creation of the course the resident will be a great dups. Then the mouths of the dogs. The oil by refle
