"THE UNION—it must be Preserved."

SATURDAY MORNING, FEB. 9, 1833.

FOR GOVERNOR:
DAWSON.

...d Mobile.

(Extract from the Pensacola Gazette.)
February 4, 1833.

...ch, &c.—About noon yesterday the ... Capt. WILLIAM KELEY, arrived at this ... board thirty-seven individuals, among ... slaves, and whose sufferings from exposure ... hunger, added to their former misfortunes, have ... of the most extraordinary character. The persons ... to be the passengers on board the brig Alexis, Capt. ... from New York, bound to New Orleans, ... Cholera on board, was compelled to ... and, near Clay ston. It will be remembered ... civil authorities of this city, fearing the ... disease into their city, ordered and caused ... Alexis to be burnt, providing a vessel to take such of ... passengers as had escaped death, to their original place ... destination, and they accordingly embarked on the 20th ... November last, in the schooner Cicero, Capt. Phenties. ... Misfortune still followed them, and on the morning of the ... fourth day, the captain being mistaken in his reckoning, ... the Cicero was totally wrecked on Wilson's Key, and the ... thirty-seven unfortunates lost every thing. By means of ... the boat and the scattered spars, all succeeded in reaching ... the Key, except two of the men, printers by profession, named ... William Lawrence and William Murphy, natives of ... Ireland, both of whom met a watery grave. After remaining ... for fifteen days on the Key, subsisting on conchs and ... weeds, they were spared the sufferings of starvation, by the ... appearance of the schooner Friend's Delight, a wrecker, ... who took them on board and conveyed them to Nassau, ... New Providence, where some little charity was extended ... and Capt. KELEY of the schooner William, kindly offered ... his services to convey them to New Orleans. They left ... Nassau on the 11th ult, but having contrary winds and the ... quantity of provisions furnished them being very small, ... they were compelled to hug the land, with the intention of ... putting into the first port. They made the Pensacola light ... on the night of the 29th ult, but the wind blowing a per... fect hurricane from the west, they were compelled to stand ... off, in which the schooner succeeded after having her sails ... torn to pieces. Indeed this last enterprise upon the sea has ... been attended with little less sufferings than their previous ... attempts, having been nearly all the time on an allowance, ... barely capable of sustaining life. All the unfortunate per... sons alluded to, with whom we have conversed, pay the ... highest compliments to the kindness and attention of Capt. ... KELEY.

View of Disaffection in Canada.—The following is from the York [Upper Canada] Patriot.

"Since our last, the long expected and much wished for intelligence from the United States has arrived. The blow has been struck which forever sunders the United States. South Carolina and Georgia have respectively taken the stand from which no force at the command of the manufacturing states can remove them. Hence all apprehensions of danger as to the future prosperity of Great Britain are dispelled. New and never failing markets will be thus opened for the products of her industry, which taking a fresh start, will conduct her to the acme of national strength and greatness. This union which was to endure forever, and to be an everlasting example of man's capability of self government, it seems, however, has not been calculated to last, even the term of a single life. Opinions to this effect have been a thousand times expressed by men read in human nature, and coincident with and confirmatory of them, is the extraordinary fact, that during the sitting of the South Carolina convention, which met to seal the doom of the union, that body were called upon to pay the last tribute of respect to the last signer of American independence."

The legislature of Maine has paid the same compliment to Messrs. Sprague and Holmes, which New Hampshire did to Senator Bell. We call it a compliment—and is it not so? A man of honor and consistency who presumes to represent the feelings and principles of a great state, will, whenever he conscientiously differs from his constituents, frankly come forth and say, "I differ with you—I cannot represent you—here is my trust returned to your hands." The legislature of Maine has simply passed resolves, that Messrs. Sprague and Holmes are considered honorable men, and that they will act as such in the present case. As to Mr. Holmes, it is an unusual compliment to him, and it is to be hoped that the flattery covertly conveyed in the resolutions, will not upset him entirely. However, "John," (as he is familiarly called in Maine,) can maintain his upright position against fearful odds.—Pennsylvanian.

RANK AND FASHION.—According to a very judicious and well written article, in the last number of the London Quarterly Review, the middle classes of English society are totally infected with idolatry of rank, and the high classes with idolatry of fashion.

Both these disorders we cannot but consider more fatal, than that idolatry of wealth with which American society is said to be infected. For wealth is a real and substantial thing, capable, however it may generally be misused—of contributing, most essentially, to the same end to the happiness of its possessor, and to the comfort and well being of society; while rank and fashion are the more unsubstantial creatures of the imagination, which although, by a sort of mental delusion they may gratify and please the possessor, can not and do not contribute in the slightest; to the enjoyment and happiness of others.

On the contrary, their very superstructure is raised on the humiliation and misery of thousands, and the author of the article to which we have alluded, draws a sad picture of the effect of fashionable dissipation, both on the EXCLUSIVES themselves, and upon those dependent upon them.

Servants, by the evil example of their fashionable masters are rendered idle, profligate and debauched; debauchery makes them necessitous; necessity makes them dishonest; and dishonesty, by sure and certain steps, leads them into crime.

The fashionables themselves are described as not holding the vulgar virtue of honesty in so great reverence as is desirable. They are said to be the chief patrons of smugglers and the principal purchasers of smuggled goods, and to improve with great zeal every opportunity of speculation that occurs.

The evil influence of the fashionables, on the trades people whom they patronise, is said to be equally disastrous. As they are very slow in paying their debts, the tradesmen think themselves justified in making reprisals by way of over charges, and extravagant prices. The fashionables are made to pay too in the same way for all the trouble and humiliation, which their foolish caprice occasion. Money settles the business account between the parties; but between man and man there is an account which many will not settle. There is a spirit of deep and settled hatred, engendered in the breasts of the tradesmen, which tends to aggravate that hostility between different classes of society, which is the greatest evil, under which England is at present suffering.

The Milliner's apprentices are described as being the peculiar victims of fashionable caprice and folly.—Dresses must be finished; finished immediately. Night labor, exhaustion; death, is the consequence. Or seeking to escape from this intolerable labor, these unfortunate girls fall the victims of temptations to which they are peculiarly exposed, and yield to the seducer to escape a bitter and arduous servitude for which their strength is insufficient.

Chastity however is a virtue, which it seems the fashionables are not particularly anxious to cultivate. —"laxity in this respect being unquestionably the CARDINAL vice of fashionable society." Adultery, though in one of the vulgar, esteemed among the greatest of crimes, may be, and is, pardoned in a fashionable, who can buy her dispensation, by costly entertainments and tickets for Almacks.

Such is the character and such the consequences of that system of fashionable society, which our young aristocracy, male and female, admire in Pelham, and the young Duke; and which they strive, (with a due sense of be sure of their innate inferiority,) in some measure humbly to imitate and introduce.—[Boston Atlas.

The Mohawk Gazette, published at Amsterdam, Montgomery county, N. Y., furnishes the following information in reply to a request to that effect, from the Superintendents of the Poor, of Columbia county, respecting a female vagrant calling herself Adelaide Sheldon, who, it was supposed, had been "clandestinely brought and left" in that county, in a state of partial derangement, and who is now in the Columbia county poor-house:—

"The young lady referred to above is one of the most ingenious and accomplished female imposters we have ever heard of. She has been "clandestinely brought and left" in a number of places during the past year, and after having succeeded in exciting the sympathy of the people, and making very favorable impressions" on the minds of the charitable, she has taken a very "clandestine" departure, and selected some other place for her operations. She has always represented herself as in search of her lover (a person to whom she applies different names; according to circumstances,) and though her peregrinations have been very extensive, she has never been able to overtake him. Every time she first enters a place, she comes in DRESSED with a fainting fit, in the door of some respectable looking house, and if it appears to be ... as to be taken in, she repines her ... with another fainting fit, ... of "partial derangement" to great ... she has a singular faculty of recovering ... them when she pleases;

This female first appeared in Schenectady about a year since, where she represented herself as a niece of Mr. Ida hard Cooke; but as that gentleman was unwilling to claim a relationship which in fact did not exist, she very suddenly disappeared, after having tested the charitable dispositions of some of the citizens, her satisfaction.

Soon afterwards, she commenced her operations in the town of Palatine in this county; there she claimed a much nearer relationship to Mr. Cooke; she stated that she was his daughter, and Mr. C. received two or three letters from that place, requesting him to send for her. As this request was not complied with, a few charitable individuals gave her money and clothes to proceed to Schenectady. She however took a different route, and was next heard of in Schoharie county. After having been hospitably entertained there, two or three weeks, she was next "clandestinely brought and left" in the village of Syracuse. Here she found it necessary to change her name also; she resided in the family of one of the most wealthy and respectable inhabitants of that place, until she had recovered from her "partial derangement;" and after having been furnished with plenty of money, again started in pursuit of her lover. She now became (lover-like,) very romantic, and proceeded to Sacandaga. Her name was changed to Mary Stanton. Not finding her lover on the Mayfield mountains, and the people in that vicinity not paying her proper respect, she went to Sandy Hill.

Two or three weeks since, the keeper of a public house in Hudson came to this county to find the parents of a female in distressed circumstances, who was then at his house; and from his description, and that contained in the above notice, there is no doubt that the "superintendents of the poor of Columbia county" have "CAUGHT A TARTAR."

From the Boston Daily Atlas.

Warren.—"The way of the transgressor is hard," says the proverb, and so thought a middle aged man who tottered into the Police Court on Friday last, and seated himself with his hat on. He was reminded by an officer of the Court that he must be uncovered. "I wont," says the veteran. "You shall," said the officer, "or I will make a complaint against you." "I'll save you that trouble," replied the veteran; "give me but ink and paper—and—Ajax asks no more." The veteran's request having been complied with, he, in a few minutes, sent to Mr. Justice Simmons the following note: "I, ——————, of Newburyport, enter a complaint against myself as a man that needs the protection of the Functionary Powers of the Police Court."

Upon being informed that the Court had no jurisdiction in his case upon his own information; Mr. Constable Holden was prevailed upon to enter a complaint, he having seen him drunk two or three times in the streets. To this complaint, the prisoner pleaded guilty, and stated as follows—

"I, sir, have become a common drunkard, unfortunately for myself, as well as for society. I am by trade a baker, and from being obliged to be up during the night, and at leisure during the day, I have become what you seemse.—With a fair education, I have visited almost every principal city in the Union. I sometimes, sir, write poetry and letters for different persons, for which they pay me in drink—drink—drink. The other evening I was watched, and learned, that I drank thirty-five times. When I perspire, sir, it is alcohol that composes the perspiration. Brandy, sir, I can smell it as it oozes through every pore of my flesh, and I want to go to the House of Correction to get regulated."

"How long do you think I ought to send you there?"

"Why, sir, about two months. When I am deprived entirely of ardent spirits, I shall be seized with de trium tremens; this will reduce my strength very much, and it will require two months at least to restore me. For a sentence for that period, sir, I shall thank you."

The unfortunate man was accordingly sentenced to two months confinement."

A Report of the Examination of Rev. Ephraim K. Avery, charged with the murder of Sarah Maria Cornell.

We find the following extract from this report in the Boston Morning Post. It presents the decision of one of the magistrates, in which the other concurred.

"In my opinion, clearly, no homicide has been committed at all, but the deceased committed suicide. The evidence of that to my mind, is irresistible, drawn from circumstances and appearances at the scene of death. If the deceased was strangled, as pretended, and then hung up, there would have been two distinct marks around her neck. The string of the calash was under the cord, and the cord then must have been put on over the calash, which could not have been done against her will; for had her struggles required the use of one arm, a person could not with a single hand have put it on, without removing the calash.—There were no marks of violence inconsistent with suicide on her person, or dress, or on the ground.

The marks of violence as testified to by the women who laid out the corpse, could not have been those of another person, because the right hand of one person, applied to the right side of another, will not present the appearances in this case, unless the person stood behind, and then the prints of the fingers would be below as well as behind the pfint of the thumb.*

But if this were a case of homicide, there is not sufficient evidence to fix a legal suspicion of guilt upon the respondent: and there is some part of the testimony that appears to me wholly irreconcilable with a reasonable suspicion of his guilt.

I must repeat my concurrence with my brother Howe, that there is not probable cause to suspect that Ephraim K. Avery is guilty of the murder of Sarah M. Cornell."

*It is supposed that the marks alluded to were made by the deceased, in an attempt to produce abortion.
