The following lines, addressed to Lady Byron, are consid ered by Walter Scott, as the finest production of Byron.

There is a mystic thread of life, o dearly wreathed with mine alone. That destiny's relentless knife
At once must sever both or none.

There is a form on which these eyes Have often gazed with fond delight; By day that form their joy supplies, And dreams restore it through the night

There is a voice whose tones inspire ch thrills of rapture through my breast, I would not hear the seraph choi Unless that voice could join the rest.

There is a face whose blushes tell Affection's tale upon the cheek; But pallid, at one fond farewell, Proclaims more leve than words can speak.

There is a lip, which mine hath press'd, And none had ever pressed before— It vowed to make me sweetly bless'd,

And mine-mine only pressed it more. There is a bosom-all my own-Hath pillowed oft this aching head;

An eye whose tears with mine are shed. There are two hearts, whose movements thrill

In unison so closely sweet!

That pulse to pulse, responsive still, They both must heave—or cease to beat. • There are two souls, whose equal flow

In gentle streams so calmly run That when they part—they part!—ah, no! They cannot part—these souls are one.
