THE BEE.

PUBLISHED AND PUBLISHED DAILY BY JEROME BAYON.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 21, 1832.

GOVERNOR,

J. B. DAWSON.

The Northern mail which was due on Monday, arrived yesterday morning. The dates are, from

New York, November 6th evening.
Philadelphia, " 7th evening.
Washington and Baltimore, " 8th morning.
Charlestown, " 10th evening.

The mail due yesterday, had not arrived at a late hour last evening. There had been no agival from Europe, later than the Silas Richards, at all of the northern ports.

We have been informed by a person residing opposite the Catholic burying ground that there was but ONE interment yesterday.

Last night, about 12 o'clock, we were visited by a light shower.

GEN. WASHINGTON Irving, arrived in this city yesterday morning, in the steamer Little Rock.

The election of electors of president and vice president, and of governor, members of congress, &c. commenced on Monday the 5th instant, in New York. The polls were to have been closed on the succeeding Wednesday evening. It will consequently be three days before we shall know the result in the city of New York, and the adjacent counties. The republican journals speak with the utmost confidence of the triumph that awaits their cause.

In Delaware, the strongest expectations are entertained of the success of white throughout the democratic candidate for governor, as well as of the Jackson electoral ticket. Letters from Rhode Island also speak of the probable success of the republican electoral ticket. In Connecticut, too, a strong party in favor of Jackson is organized, and no Clayist, possessing common sense, entertains the faintest glimmering of a hope of obtaining the electoral votes of Maine and New Hampshire.

There were plenty of doleful faces among the Clayists, as they read their advices from Pennsylvania yesterday morning. Some of them began to feel in their pockets, in anticipation of paying the bets. There was also some muttering against "the old organ," for having deluded us as followers for the hundredth time!

It will be seen by the returns which we copy to-day of the late Pennsylvania election, that the Jackson electoral ticket has succeeded in that state, by a majority of 25 to 63,000 votes. Her honest yeomanry have come out in their uprightness and their strength, and have thrown the profligate combination of cunning brokers and desperate politicians that they can neither be deluded nor corrupted. All hail—Pennsylvania!

We are asked by the Argus, if the Bee "was not in favor of the bank before we were instructed of general Jackson's opinion?" No: while the Bee was yet a neutral paper it was taken to task for disputing the justness of the extravagant praise that was lavished upon Mr. Adams's separate report on the same subject, at the time of its appearance. Enough, however, was elicited by the majority report, to induce many judicious and honest politicians to abandon whatever favorable opinion they might previously have cherished in regard to that institution. The editors of New York Journal of Commerce are instances. We could cite many others.

The American Theatre, It will be remembered, opens THIS EVENING. Let us hope that the manager, who appears in one of his best parts, will have a hearty welcome.

Hereafter we shall give some account of the new members of the corps dramatique.

The evening edition of the Journal of Commerce of the 5th instant, gives a fresh instance of the mischief resulting from commingling politics and stocks. The sales of United States bank stock, on that day, at the New York broker's board, were very large. It will be seen, amounting to 1306 shares, at 117 to 117¼, being a decline 2 to 2¼ per cent. since the 3d instant. Below we give the SALES AT THE NEW YORK EXCHANGE, Nov. 5.

100 New Orleans city bank, 110
1306 United States bank, 117 a 117¼
Bills on London, 9 80

A similar revulsion, in regard to United States bank stock, has also taken place, at head quarters, in Philadelphia.—The bank thermometer, according to the Philadelphia American Sentinel, during the election, ranged as follows:

Thursday, Nov. 1, 119¾
Friday, Nov. 2, 119¾
Saturday, Nov. 3, (day after city election,) 121
Monday, Nov. 5, (accounts from the country coming in,) 117 3-9 asked;

but no sales. The same journal of the 6th, when the returns were sufficiently in to indicate the result, significantly asks —"what will it it be worth to-day?" The bankers will have been taught a lesson, by the recent election, that will render them cautious, hereafter, how they attempt to commingle politics and stocks.

Glover's new drama, entitled the "Cradle of Liberty" has been played, apparently, with eminent success, on the boards of the New York Bowery Theatre. This drama, which was first produced at the American Theatre in this city, it will be remembered, is wrought out of Cooper's unsuccessful novel, entitled "Lionel Lincoln." It forms an exception, and almost the only one, with which we are acquainted, of a novel, whether good or bad, being successfully represented on the stage. Even "Ivanhoe," the most dramatic piece in the language, kept possession of the stage but a short time; and the "Water Witch," though a splendid spectacle, is already laid upon the shelf. On the stage, novels always fail to realize the pictures which the author conjures up before the mind of every reader, and therefore they always disappoint the beholder.

Indeed, novel writing and novel reading seem to have superseded, among us, not only the power of producing, but the facility of enjoying, the genuine drama. The reason is obvious. The love of home, and the general preference of the closet over a box at the theatre, which so extensively prevails in American society, lead us to prefer having dramatic enjoyment and dramatic interest placed before us in the more convenient form of narrative, rather than upon the stage, whither we must take the trouble of going to witness them.

Some foreign critics aver that our barbarism and contempt of refinement disgusted us with the acting drama; and that the more expensive and well fed among us, have turned to the writers, to avoid being shocked with such absurdities and indelicacies as are portrayed by Mrs. Trollope. It is not to be disguised that there is much to be seen and heard at our American theatres, calculated to offend or displease every mind delicately alive to the forms of true politeness and good breeding; but look to the English caricatures in the windows of almost any print-shop, and you will find it to become that it is not exclusively confined to American theatrical audiences. Such cannot therefore be admitted as the true reason of the decline which we observe in the taste for the drama; and it must be borne in mind, besides, that the drama is at a lower ebb, in England, at the present time, than it is in America. The pressure here, of Charles Kemble and his accomplished daughter, as well as of James Wallack, sufficiently bespeaks this; and we must therefore look for the cause elsewhere. The rise of the novel, beyond controversy, occasioned the decline of the drama, of which we are complaining. But more of this hereafter.

Mr. Biddle's minority report on the bank inquiry, it seems from the admission of the Argus, was printed, at Philadelphia, at the expense of the bank. We are not however informed whether that friend of Mr. Chaudron, who was so very solicitous of "enlightening the public [in Louisiana] in regard to one of the most important and valuable institutions of our country" as to make so liberal a subsidy for that purpose, was Mr. Biddle or not. This is wrong—unjust. So disinterested a philanthropist should have his name printed on the cover of every missionary magazine, or tract, as the symbol of liberty, stamped upon Mr. Biddle, next emission of "uniform currency!" We are inclined to think it was Mr. Biddle's particular friend "Q." No one else has half his zeal for the bank.

The editor of the Argus too,—one of the most distinguished patriots that ever breathed the air of freedom,—has also found a generous gentleman in Philadelphia to contribute the aforesaid reward. Nobody will dream of his having "received thirty pieces of silver" for his generous patronage. Whether he be an heir of one quarter of "the ark of the covenant" that rattled between the saints and nationals, receive pay for distributing an edition of Mr. M'Duffie's minority bank report?—It could not be! Even had Mr Biddle sent him a check for $580, as he did Wilson of Pittsburg, it would have been indignantly returned. Who doubts it?

Then there was a lot of extra National Gazettes, which broke the mail down once or twice on their way from Philadelphia to this city, and which caused no little grumbling from the Argus, under the impression that they were extra Globes. They arrived opportunely since they contained the aforesaid report in English, and saved the expense of a new edition here. Whence came they? Who paid? Out with it. Don't leave it for Mr. Biddle to report, in his next monthly statement, the proceedings of his friend Q. in this quarter.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.

LATEST FROM BUENOS AYRES

We have received Buenos Ayres papers to Aug. 25th.—The British packet of that day says—

The Flor del Rio, arrived yesterday, from Montevideo. All was tranquil there. The President, Rivera, left Montevideo, on Monday night last, with 1800 troops, to proceed against Lavallejas. The latter had issued a proclamation stating that he had a force of more than 500 men. Some passengers say that he had not so many.

A letter from a mercantile house at B. Ayres, Aug. 25, says—"We hear that Mr. Baylies intends demanding his passports as soon as the Warren arrives at Montevido Video. This government appears anxious to insult him in every way possible. Teachers have been forbid to attend his family, under threat of imprisonment; and, we heard to-day, that the government's despatches, from Washington, per Geo. Washington, [arrived 24th] which were landed in the letter bag, have not been delivered to him."

A copy of the new regulations of the port has been handed to us.—Boston Cour.

Two deaths are announced, by the late arrival from England, of men, each distinguished in his own way, but of very dissimilar pretensions, in remote quarters of Europe. FERDINAND the 7th, by the grace of God King of Spain and the Indies, died at Madrid, on the 19th of September, and WALTER SCOTT, at Abbotsford, on the 22d, the one an absolute monarch, master of one of the finest kingdoms in Europe, and of fifteen millions of subjects; the other an author, an unostentatious citizen of a sterile country, dying almost in poverty upon his farm. Yet how vastly above the departed monarch, in all things which constitute true glory, substantial and enduring power,—the applause of the time and the veneration of all posterity, do mankind rank the modest Scotchman, who lived secluded from the world which admired him, and in solitude. His contemporary in death as he obeyed, for 20 years, by millions, who knew him only by exactions, who cursed him in their hearts as a tyrant whom they despised while they feared him, and who look upon his death, with no other feeling than because it transfers their hatred as the inheritance of another to whom they must pay alike unwilling obedience. He in his retirement received a spontaneous homage from all quarters of the globe, a free will acknowledgment from all civilized nations and tongues, of his power over the imagination and the heart, a generous recognition by millions who professed themselves obedient to the spell of his genius, of his title to a seat among the highest of the gifted intellect, the benefactors, as well as the pride of the human race. To-morrow, and who shall think of the 7th Ferdinand, except as one of an ignoble race of Kings, that selfish and unteachable race, whom society will shake from its skirts with disgust, and mourn heaven's shame to have ever suffered to curse the world with their vices and their ignorance. But death shall add a tender feeling to the love and admiration which both heirs-ph[illegible] have expressed for the "author of Waverly." "To Amurath an Amurath succeeds," to Ferdinand follows Carlos as a Carlos was followed by a Ferdinand; yet who shall fill the chair of Scott! A long time must elapse before that question can be answered; but it may be confidently affirmed that the whole Bourbon race, in all their branches may run out; become extinct; before their separate or combined merits produce or reserve a reputation such as his; great and unsullied.—*Balt. WEEK FIRST OF SOCIETY.—Among the London Police Reports is found the following humorous examination of two ladies.

Mrs. Molly Hill, an elderly lady, weighing about 20 stone, brought Mrs. Betsey and Miss Betsey Grace before Mr. T. Dyer, for having, with malice aforethought inflicted a pinch on her left arm, and a scratch on one of her ample cheeks.

From Mrs. Hill's version of the story, it appears that Mrs. Betsey Grace had flung a pail of water over her little boy Bobby, and on her going to demand an explanation of the proceeding, Miss Betsey 'licked up a combustion,' which eventually ended in one of them perpetrating the pinch, and the other the scratch. To prove the truth of her statement she declared that she had brought a 'whole volume of witnesses, who were waiting houtside.'

Mrs. Betsey Grace, in explanation of the affair of the pail of water, declared, that as she was 'sushing' her door, the child jumped quite promiscuous through it (the slushing.) Whereupon, continued Mrs. Grace, 'Mrs Hill, who was atostickated in liquor, came a flying hover to my house like a 'roaring lion,' and knocked successfully at my door in the most violentest manner. I went out, and says to her, says I, &c. my good woman, hear reason; as I wanted to talk to her in the most sensibles manner; but no, 'your yorship,' she calls me heavy thing but a lady, and shoots my darter, who came to hear the 'scrumption,' with every thing vot she could lay hold to.'

Mr. Dyer, understanding they all lived in Southampton court, inquired why they could not live peaceable together?

'Vy, your worship,' said Mrs. Grace, 'I'll tell you vot it is; my husband and hern noises in werry different circles, for since we've left off taking in washing, we keeps the werry first of society; me and my family are particular intimate with Mr. Smith, the gentleman vot is the great mahogany maker, and my darter visits the family of the Jone's's. Keeps a large wholesale greengrocer's at the corner of our court, on terms of ekal footens. So as we rank ourselves above low people, we doesn't associate with Mrs. Hall and her family, no how.'

Mr. Dyer recommended the parties to retire and settle; but Mrs. Hill, who felt the dignity offered to the reality of her family more than the assault, proposed such unreasonable terms, as the price of concealment, that they were compelled to apply to the magistrate again, who at once dismissed the warrant.
