This, that gentleman, should have recollected is but one of the many features in that supperannuated instrument which requires revision. There are many others, which want of time prevents us from enume rating particularly, among which the defective state of our andiciary system is not the least glaring. We should have thought, however, that a measure having for its object alone to ascertain public sentiment, would not have thus been stifled, whatever may have been the views of any member in regard to any particular amendment that might have

"The friends of the Nashville and New Orleans Rail Road Company are not left to mourn its fate," as asserted by a morning paper. The Legislatures have done nothing more than what duty required by adopting the amendment which is the subject of complaint. Further enterprise would have been cut off, had the charter passed in its original shape.-As the matter now stands, should the road upon its completion meet the public wants-no other will ever be made, buf should it fail, the hands of our citizens are left free to make any other work of improvement of a similar character which may meet with better success.

We have uniformly supported the undertaking of a Rai Road to Nashville as proposed by the present applicant for a charter, but we cannot approve of their possessing privileges which may ultimately prove of public detriment

AN INDIANTAM

AN INDIANIAN. December, 183 4.

From the Baltimore Gazette.

Having closely examined some Lokdon newspapers which reached our office by the last packet, we are enabled to lay before our readers some additional particulars relating to the change in the British ministly. It appears to be generally admitted, that should Sir Robert Peel refuse to co-operate with the Duke of Wellington—and some of the papers minimate doubts on this point—the Duke will be anable to frame a Cabinet which will give ratisfaction to the nation. Of the numerous public meetings which had been held in consequence of the change, only one, so far as we observe, was decidedly in its favo; but, on the other hand, the fall of the Whigs had exolted less aympathy than would have been the case, had they possesses the full confidence of the people. In Radicals repreach them with having acted on Tory principles, and the Tories denounce them as enemies to the constitution; while their own partizans are less zealous in defending them than might have been anticipated.

The Tories do not deny the necessity of Church reform; on the contrary, they insist on it, but then they say it From the Baltimore Gazette. on the contrary, they insist on it, but then they say it must proceed from the friends of the Church, and not from the enemies, designated by these terms their own party and the op: onite respectively. The result of the whole appears to be, that a majority of both the landed and monied arise. The committee on the part of the house, Messrs. Montegut,

Lo be, that a majority of both the landed and monied aristocracy are favorable to the change, while the middle classcon mone, as now constituted, is admitted to represent the latter portion much more effectually than it did under the rotten borough system, the durability of the Wellington cabinet must be considered as accommingly doubtful. to twhill it by undermana measures, it is impossible in the present state of things, to forsec.
