REPUBLICAN MEETING.

The friends of Judge Dawson are informed that on Saturday evening at 7 o'clock, a general meeting wi be held at Mr Davie's Ball room. They are invited to b nunctual in their attendance.

The Louisiana says .- "To obtain the right of voting State tax must be paid: and in this country the man that can not EARN this inestimable privilege of a freeman, is most sesuredly, not worthy of it. He must be indeed, devoid o ndustry, prudence, or economy, a VAGRANT, or a VAGAwho are debarred the inestimable privilege of voting. Vagrants or vagabonds forsooth! Such language as this, cannot but procure contempt and indignation for him who is so lost to shame as to otter it!

The Advertisers speak of the tricks of the adversaries of the White ticket—and verily they may as they are well acquainted with the source whence they emanate. We have quainteen these spurious tickets nor heard of them but in their these spurious tickets nor heard of them. We may readily conclude that Mr Gibson less a vote from the severe manner in which he speaks of those that do no possess that privilege. We had supposed the contrary; - thus entiles our doubts for he would surely have been a little more quantical with the source of them but in their most seen these spurious tickets nor heard of them but in their face shows the source, and that undeniably too, from whence they come they some the genuine productions of the "White party's the same tun attempting to make the "people" being that the Dawson party would resort to such vide means to promote their ends. We need no such device. We stand or our own ments alone, we source that adventitious and which composed in his language had it been otherwise.

It is made the theme of general complaint against General awson, that he is supported by the Common People. Our or own merits alone, wifeout that adventitious and which our refundation, those whom they are pleased to classify as the poor, ignorant, and vulger. Not content with applying every opprobious epithet to us, calling us "whiskey drinkers" "vogrants," and "vagabonds," and arrogating to themselves all the "decency" and "respectability," they would monopolize all the political privilegas of social existence. They include the dangerous dootrine, "take care of the rich, and the rich will take care of the poor," and in accordance therewith, would abridge (though God knows, the inestim ibe privilega of voting is already sufficiently abridged) the basis of suffrage, and exclude all those who have not extensive of suffrage, and exclude all those who have not extensive possessions, from the enjoyment of that right. In fact, the possessions, from the enjoyment of that right. In fact, the plea that property alone should confer suffrage, tends to the establishment of a standard of wealth, by which the "apper classics" would ultimately obtain the ascendeny. This is the great result for which they are struggling. They seek to make themselves more powerful and to weaken and impoverish the poor. No wonder then, that the democracy poverish the poor. No wonder then, that the democracy poverish the peor. No wonder then, that the democracy should be sensibly affected with the importance of the constant and pacific ground the people of the constant and pacific ground that it should elicit their strenous exertions. It is a withing of the concept, and that it should elicit their strenous exertions. It is a within a superfeed of the concept and the c test, and that it should elicit their stremous exertions. It is a temark, fraught with truth, that as a man acquires riches, his notions of the rights and privileges of society undergo a gradual change, and he becomes solicitous to he dge himself round with peculiar defenses, to desire exclusive privileges and to contend for the establishment of monopolies. This sport of enoidity must be resisted, and represed by his written. spirit of cupidity must be resisted, and repressed by his written pe over neighboars and the only way by which they can effectually do this is to prevent his gaining a direct influence upon the operations of the government.
