On Thursday evening Mrs. Pritchard unde her first-speciare in the cluracter of Elvira. This lady is possessed of a commanding, yet graceful payson, a voice of great-puwer, and expressive commensures and a fine eye. We were very entry to perceive that site was labering under a severe influsionin, and did not produce the abitation, which as a well a know her in her power. In the last-scene, however, site an operation of the resident we have seldom seen certainly gave it in a manner that we have seldom seen consiler—it created universal admiration. Mrs. Hilson took the part-of Cora and fally sestained her reputation. Pearson's Rolls was in his seen misstely style, and met with rounds of applaues. Scottar Pigatro was good. Bannister ex Alonzo was more natural, than we have seen him. We would measure all liabbard, who has a fine passes and a found. We are induced to think it was from the latter cause, for we observed another commedian energing the part of the bind-man, and afterwards the Centined in the same piece. Now does this not discover a want of energy (to say the least) on the manager's part? We presume there is no theatre in the union with so isadequate a company. The after-piece went off very miscrably: it was redeemed from domnation by Thorne as Tag. We think the time has passed when Mrs. Pritchard could succeed in such characters as when Mrs. Pritchard could succeed in such characters as Little Pickle. It would be to her advantage to adhere to tracedy only, for which she is infinitely better adapted.—Hubbard made a complete meks of Old Pickle—way was that part not assigned to Parre Farren, who is a great favorite?

Joel Parker who has been recently called to the care of a church is New Orleans, is new on a visit to this city, to obtain peru-nine and to amint in the erection of a church in that great commercial emportume. The high intellectual emissions about and ardent piety of this devoted and successful preacher, reader him competent of this ardunus duty. Sir Parker has preached several sermons on this subject in the churches here. He states that more has the streets in that city, than during the whole of its his tory; and anticipates very beneficial results when the Protestant American population shall get the ascendancy. The Protestant churches there, for the most part only neite public contempt, in their external appearance. Methodist Church numbers about three hundred witten in the forences, and about the same number of blacks in the afternuon, for a congregation. The single Episcopal burch, rarely counts more than fifty or sixty per passent during religious services. There are two Prosby-terion C. arches, one very small, and the other very re-spectable. And there are all for thirty thousand Protesauts of the place. The remaining thirty thousand are Catholies. He spoke of the wants and destitution of the place with great caution and without exaggeration. He would scorn to underrete a place which was now his home; and where he had been freated with great kindsess and hospitality. But he stated freely that the Holy Sub-bath was descrated by military parades, and theatrical exhibitions. There was not much to choose, between the Protestant and Roman Catholic population: only the perhaps equal to our own; and alluded to the gentlemanly and to the generale character of the citizens.—What was wanted now, was to impart respectability to Christian institutions, by the erection of respectable adfices of worlanghed at for attending his church regularly on the Sabus h; and he was obliged to tell his companions, that he went from principle, that he had deliberated and found it to be his duty. The small church he had gathered, had subscribed $40,000 for a church; and if the diastrons umes of the past winter had not ensued, they would have been able to get along without foreign assistance. He only asked for one fourth of that sum, and the edifice would go up the winter. He stated at the conclusion, on Wishing to advance the chieft might send Will not some of our high minded and wealthy merchants whose ships visit New Orleans.
