The judiciary committee, to whom was referred a bill entitled 'a bill to regulate the intercourse between consignors and consignees,' respectfully report.

The committee have examined the provisions of the bill, submitted to them. They are of opinion that the liabilities of consignees, under the existing laws are the same as it is proposed to make them by the present bill; and that no change in our laws in that respect is required. That section of the bill which provides that the whole property of the consignee shall be subjected to a tacit mortgage in favor of the consignor, from the date of the date of the consignment, is strongly opposed to the views entertained by the committee, on the subject of mortgages; and would, in their opinion, produce the most injurious effects.

The committee are also of opinion that the provisions of the bill inflicting a punishment on the debtor unnecessarily soon; and that the same object could be better attained in a different manner. They therefore recommend the rejection of the bill.

MONDAY, March 2, 1855.

The house met, agreeably to adjournment. On motion, ordered, that leave of absence be granted for a few days to Messrs Davonport and Dosson.

Mr Ogden, on behalf of the committee appointed to examine into the condition of the male orphan asylum, made the following report, to wit: The joint committee appointed to examine into the condition of the male orphan asylum, respectfully report:

In discharging the duty imposed on them to visit the asylum provided for destitute orphan boys by the humanity of the state and the philanthropy of her citizens, the committee have experienced a high degree of gratification.

Impressed with a feeling of lively interest which the subject is so well calculated to produce, the committee proceeded to visit the asylum, and enquire into the condition of those unfortunate beings who have been thrown in their helpless infancy on the charity of the world. These destitute orphans, about eighty-three in number, of various ages, from 15 to 2 years of age, were presented to the committee; and it affords them satisfaction to state that the general appearance of the boys indicated the enjoyment of fine health, and a buoyancy of spirits which would almost lead the spectator to forget their misfortune. The buildings provided for the institution are plain, but remarkably neat and comfortable. The domestic regulation of the establishment appears to be well managed; good order and discipline prevail in its several departments; and it is evident that great pains are bestowed to render the unfortunate little creatures comfortable and happy. The officers of the institution manifest an interest in the boys which is creditable to themselves in the highest degree. The committee are also satisfied that the utmost economy is observed in the maintenance of the establishment; and that the greatest reliance may be reposed in the fidelity and ability of those who administer its affairs.

The importance of cherishing, by the patronage of the state, a society which has been formed for the noble and disinterested purpose of redeeming destitute orphans of the rising generation from the misery of want, and the infamy of vice; and qualifying them by religious and literary instruction to become useful and respectable citizens, has been deeply impressed on the minds of every member of the committee. We have no institution of which the state can be more justly proud, nor in which more needs and deserves its generous and liberal aid.

This society was founded in 1824, by the liberality of certain individuals; in 1825 it was incorporated, and received a donation from the state of two thousand dollars. Its present resources consist of an annual appropriation of two thousand five hundred dollars, which was granted by the state in 1828, and of the proceeds of the sale of a gambling license to one of the theatres, amounting to $4,000.

The statement furnished by the treasurer and which is herewith submitted, shows that the expenses of the institution on a very economical scale will amount to twelve thousand five hundred dollars. The society must therefore depend for a large portion of its annual expenses on the support of private charity. The committee are of opinion that the contribution of the state to such an object should be as liberal as possible, and that it should be placed on a permanent and respectable basis.

That the resources by which an institution so honorable to the state is supported should be derived from the encouragement of a vice which is so reprehensible to our country, is deeply to be lamented; and the committee have unanimously resolved to recommend to the legislature the repeal of that part of the act of 1833, granting to the male orphan asylum the amount derived from the sale of a gambling license, and that a law be passed making a certain annual appropriation for the benefit of the society, which will be worthy the character of the state, and the high objects which are intended to be promoted by it. The accompanying documents and a bill to carry into effect the views of the committee are therefore respectfully submitted.

A. HOE, Chairman of the part of the senate. M. LABATUT, Chairman of the part of the house.

A. N. OGDEN, Chairman of the House. T. H. LEWIS, J. P. FRERET, Chairman of the House.

Which report was adopted, and on motion ordered to be printed.

The same member, on behalf of the same committee, introduced a bill entitled 'an act relative to the male orphan asylum,' which was read for the first time, and ordered for a second reading on to morrow.

Mr Richardson, on behalf of the special committee, to whom was referred the bill entitled 'an act to branch the Louisiana agricultural society,' made the following report:

The committee appointed specially to examine the bill entitled 'an act to branch the Louisiana agricultural society,' beg leave to report that they have performed that duty, and find that the object which the bill has in view is such that the committee think it expedient, and therefore recommend the adoption and passage of the same subject to such amendments as the house may in their wisdom think proper.
