

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. - The market for the week ending Jan. 19, 1918, was characterized by a general decline in prices of most commodities. Cotton advanced, while sugar, coffee, and other commodities were mostly lower. The stock market was also lower, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 110.12.