Correspondence of the Boo 2018 Wassington, April 14th, 1836.

Mr Grundy's report on the expediency of making contracts with the different railroad companies for the transportation of the mail, is a very sensible paper, and seems to meet with the approbation of all parties. The plan suggested is to take from the postunater-general the power to convert for agreeing the mails; and the plan suggested is to take from the postmaster-general the power to contract for enrying the mails; and the power to contract for the conveyance of the property, troops and seemen of the U Sates, now vested in the secretaries of war and navy, and vest it in congress; which shall make these contracts for long periods, and pay the consideration in advance. The government, says the report, does not want the property in these rail roads, but merely the use of them; leaving to the states thro which they peas, the making of them and all jurisdiction over them. It is judicious to make these contracts now, as better terms can be made with railcontracts now, as better terms can be made with rail-road companies now than at any time hereafter; and the condition of the treasury is auspicious to such an arrangement. Considering all circumstances, the com-sittee are of common that to receive a factor. Mrs. Entrox.—The excitement of field sports, has always been the chief charm of a country life in the eyes of the young and active, so great a one that no pleasure the city affords is considered by them an equivalent; pent up in brick walls they look forward with impatience to the joys the torest promises. All classes partake of the same feeling.—The young lawyer often looses sight of his quarto in the recollection of the gleries of fellowing a fox; and the young merchant tired of folios and ledgers, dreams of popping a patridges: it was with little surprise then, that I heard last week that some of our young men of the class. Teras consumers natif debarred from indulging the bent of their nature in the usual mode, have sought out for themselve another:—that deprived of sun-lit glades and babbling brooks they are to fain content themselves and the cannot hie—on a pointer, they si-c on a terrier; that unable to bree a fox, they think t a pleasure to hole a rat.—I was a good deal amased with the expedient; and I was pleased that they had a plan which would early of gratify their longings and at the same

The New York American gives the following anecdote, on the authority of a brother of the officer to whom it relates—
