MR. Editor,—Sir, you will be so kind, through the medium of your very valuable journal, to contradict a statement fraudulently and maliciously inserted in your paper of the 3d inst, which falsely asserts my assuming the business of a certain JAMES JUPER, who, it appears, is at present incarcerated in the jail of this city. This being done by certain individuals whose malicious views I have been able to ruin in every case whom I can satisfactorily prove to be more feloniously culpable in the performance of diabolical deeds than was the incarcerated individual whom they allude to. My long standing in New Orleans will sufficiently and satisfactorily exonerate me from the wicked imputations of those three men whom I allude to, and whom I can publicly prove to be thieves and scoundrels.

THE BEE.

Official State and City Papers,
PRINTED BY J. BAYON.

NEW-ORLEANS:
THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 5, 1836.

FOR PRESIDENT,
M. VAN BUREN.
FOR VICE PRESIDENT
RICHARD M. JOHNSON.

The state convention of the democratic party met in Baton Rouge on Monday, last; and appointed nearly the whole of the electors nominated at the time of the last presidential election. This may doubly forego success to Van Buren's friends, as it unites the credit and democratic interest.

In the important case of Landreaux and Perrin, vs the Orleans Building company, the supreme court of this state has given a decision in favor of the defendants. This will have an effect upon the suites of a large amount of property.

Messrs G Eustis and R M Carter were counsel for the defendants; and Messrs L Peirce and J P Benjamin for the plaintiffs. The prominent features of the suit and decision will hereafter be given.

In announcing that the benefit of Mr R G Pearson will take place this evening at the St Charles theatre, we may state that this season will be his last in New Orleans. He has gained here an enviable reputation—made rather than sought; and has evinced histrionic talents of a superior grade. His knowledge and display of character are very great; his reading is in general correct; his enunciation distinct and full, loud without being boisterous; and his attitudes coincide with the action to be exhibited. He departs for the Atlantic cities, where we trust his will be received with that esteem which his talents merit.

De obibus rebus, et quibusdam aliis.

Present Messrs Smith, Thomson, Johnson and the Editor.

Thomson. Very well, I can comprehend why you write in favor of Texas,—not only from the spirit of liberty, but from your belief that Texas was and should be an adjunct of the United States; and that (as you say) were it otherwise, it would be a receptacle and a temptation for runaway slaves from all parts of the southern states; but I wonder still that you are so decided, as many of your patrons are merchants trading with Mexico.

Editor. My patrons! Alas, I have none; and scarcely want them. I have identified myself in major parts with the Bee; yet its patrons are not mine. Like Virgil in his pretty lament of disappointment when he found his couplet on Augustus and Jove attributed to another, and himself deprived of the credit, I may exclaim, by varying the allusion to verses—

Hos ego versiculos feci, tulit alter honores:
Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes, etc.

The interests of the merchants are however of prominent importance with me; and I am solicitous to forward them in all respects, consistent with propriety.—Those who trade with Mexico in a regular manner deserve countenance, as the commerce thence may be cherished either by England or Spain, or by both, if the citizens of New Orleans are incautious—for considering what the latter have already done;—considering that England is struggling hard for the commerce of all the gulf of Mexico, and has already her packets trading to Cuba; and reflecting that should Spain recognize the independence of Mexico, she may have favorable or predominant terms of trade, and may render Havana the intermediate mart to Europe—we may be apprehensive of the New Orleans trade. But when the liberty and existence of a people allied to Americans by birth and habits, are concerned,—when I find that a few of our merchants have endeavored to monopolise the Mexican trade by a special agreement to furnish provisions and equipments to the Mexican army, provided they have their goods entered in the Mexican ports free of duty, and with a preference of market, I cannot support that monopoly of a doubly invidious or injurious nature. I argue on abstract principles of justice alone; as I am not interested nor concerned with either of the parties engaged in the war or its trade. It would be preferable for the New Orleans merchants to assist Texas, and break up the monopoly of Mexican trade, than to continue matters as they have been and are. Equal rights and generous competition are my guide of conduct.

Smith. But leaving Texas aside for the present, and even supposing the late intelligence from Houston's forces to be tolerably correct, let us look nearer home; and let me say that as a merchant trading in the upper municipality, and residing in the central, I am pleased with the anxiety you have invariably evidenced to promote all objects useful or necessary to the city. Before you came here we were not informed of the causes of the obstacles impeding the navigation of the Mississippi, in the manner you have shown, much less of the remedy you propose. We had a vague idea of the energy of the river; and believed it capable of forcing its way if left to itself.

Nay, we even smiled at Judge Martin for passingly alluding to the subject, in the introduction to his history of Louisiana. But you have treated the subject in detail; you have not only appealed to the merchants to deepen the bed by confining the channel and stopping all but one pass—but you have rather freely (pardon the expression) endeavored to expose our weakness, not only to ourselves, but to others.

Editor. Let me int rupt you for a moment. The Bee is now taken and read in Liverpool, London, Havre, Paris, Bordeaux and other places in Europe, as well as in the chief cities in this country. I have hitherto sought to persuade and convince, rather than coerce or command; but tho' I did not desire to expose the state of the Mississipp navigation to those who abroad and afar, trade with New Orleans, I am resolved to do so, if the subject be not properly considered, and energetically enforced. Yes, sir, I shall publicly caution shippers in all parts of the world not to send hither vessels drawing more than 7 or 8 feet water; and specify the reasons.

Johnson. That will not answer sir: "it is a bad bird befouls its own nest." Try gentle means yet longer: and the merchants will at last be convinced that their duty is involved with their interests, and that the latter will be materially injured, if the navigation of the river is so shamefully neglected. You know the relations of our merchants; and that each struggles for himself, not for the city or the general welfare; but time will soon remove this injurious correlation: and I will find that the good of each is promoted by effecting objects of general importance and interest. Is not that your belief, Mr Smith?

Smith. Decidedly; but we should hasten that event—take time by the forelock; not permit him to lag behind. But I may safely leave the means of action to our friend, so far as he is concerned; also he is occasionally more impetuous than prudent. There is another subject that he has noticed, with which I am equally pleased—that is, the establishment of a line of packet ships with one or more ports in Europe. We shall shortly have steamships plying between New York and New Orleans; but that I regret, rather than desire, as it will more closely link the chains which bind us to our Atlantic rival; and give her the complete predominancy and control. These steamships may touch at Havana and Key West, as well as at Charleston; and thus concentrate trade and travel on New York. I am inclined to think that it would be preferable to cut all connection with our rival, than thus support her, to be trampled on.

Editor. Right sir: would to Heaven that other merchants reflected on the subject in the same manner; and that direct importation for all goods intended for domestic consumption would prevail. At present the importing merchants of New Orleans—with probably the exception of those who import wines, or commodities for the Mexican market—are perfect serfs to to those in New York; and pay them an annual tribute of 25 per cent to be allowed a modicum of their retail trade—when they themselves might outvie the New Yorkers, were the Mississippi navigation improved so as to secure a safe entrance for large vessels from foreign ports at all periods (which cannot be done for New York in cold weather); and were lines of regular packets established hence to Liverpool and London or Havre rather than to New York which would be truly serviceable to New Orleans. Indeed I hope that such lines will soon be established by our capital merchants, to destroy the monopoly of the New Yorkers and their line. Sir, I could amply expatiate on this subject; and prove that were packets established hence to one or two ports of England and France, touching at Havana, their trade and travel would be a source of the greatest wealth to New Orleans; for those who now travel from or trade with New York, that are resident in the southern or western states, or even in Mexico, the West Indies and north parts of South America would prefer our more communication in every respect. But I am disheartened and disheartened by the apathy of those immediately interested in the welfare of New Orleans, as their property and trade are directly concerned; and why should I contend for their interests to prejudice my own?

Thomson. What are your interests?

Editor. At present they are in embryo, or exist only in prospect: indeed I scarcely know what they are, as they are now confined to the energies of a common pilot. I may have used a wrong epithet; yet quality it by saying that the promotion of the general welfare of the city is my interest, as well as duty. But let us speak of this city itself: what do you think Mr Johnson of [illegible] locality, its commerce and prospects?

Johnson. [illegible] almost too much, in [illegible] of such a comprehensive [illegible] the high and dry parts of it as [illegible] plan of construction [illegible] of the rails.
