Mr Editor—Believing that you are desirous of secuting the freedom of the press and of doing justice to all, I beg leave to state through your columns that Mr Caldwell advertised to give a premium for the best address, and best comedy to be written for his new theatre. The address selected was that by Mrs Ellet, indy of professor Ellett, now of S C college; authoriess of some other prize addresses, a translated traggity, and some articles in the American Quarterly Review published at Philadelphia. Mr translater of the Camp street theatre wrote the best coinedy, in Mr Caldwell's opinion, yet it was not accepted. Whether his play was conformable to the advertisement. I cannot say, but I know that Mrs Ellett's address was fet; and that it was devoid of any application to Caldwell or his theatre and would have been adapted to the opening of one wester as well as another. But it is not well adapted to any, which must be evident to any who have trad it. See how it begins.

Like the rich beam that lights the ruin's cold. Hallowing with jie the precincts of the dead—The Muses Tay of the writer, let me any to the sex of the writer, let me any you is this poetry or nonsense?
