NEW BOOKS.—We are indebted to the publishers, through J. B. Steel, Camp street, for the following new works:—

The Clock Maker, or the Sayings and Doings of Sam Slick of Slickville—New York: Burgess & Stringer, publishers.—This is a new edition of Judge Haliburton's popular and humorous collection of Yankee sayings, anecdotes and axioms. We need not recommend it. It has been universally read and admired.

The Young Husband's Book and The Young Wife's Book—Lea & Blanchard, publishers.—These are two very neat pocket volumes embellished by handsome engravings. They are designed as manuals of the moral, religious and domestic duties, imposed by the relations of married life. They contain an infinite deal of excellent advice conveyed in a pleasing style, alike free from stiffness and affectation.

☞ The Board of Health of Mobile reported on Sat. urday, three new cases of yellow fever as having occurred within the preceding twenty-four hours.

Dr. Mott.—"This eminent surgeon, who is as much an ornament to his profession as an honor to his country, has lately been elected an honorary member of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Belgium. To receive this honor it is necessary to have the king's approbation, which, in the shape of a royal edict by Leopold, accompanies the diploma transmitted to Dr. Mott.

☞ Three eminent physicians of New York, Messrs. James R. Manly, Sam'l Forray and Edwin Jewett, have published a certificate stating that the disease pre. vailed at Rondout in Ulster county, is a bilious remittent fever, with a great tendency to assume a typhoid type, and that they are of opinion that no case of yellow fever has occurred in that locality, nor has any case of fever been observed accompanied with the black vomit peculiar to that malady.

Defalcation and repudiation are not crimes peculiar to the United States. We learn from the St. Johns New Brunswicker of the 2d inst., that John R. Partelow, the late chamberlain of that city, is a defaulter to a large amount—the defalcation, as far as yet ascertained, having reached eleven thousand pounds. So much for the defalcation. Next comes the repudiation, which is thus announced:

It will be recollected that a committee of the board of aldermen for 1842, adjusted accounts with Mr. Partelow up to that year, when it was found that the funds of the corporation owed him £10,000 and upwards, and he received bonds for that amount. But on Wednesday last, the Common Council refused to carry a Northern State and would be defeated in all the Western States except perhaps, Mississippi and Alabama; he must nothing of the kind, but only intended to say that Mr. Calhoun "was not probably the favorite candidate of any of the states, but that to which he referred."

By the way, in this same explanatory article of the Enquirer, there occurs a sentence which merits to be chronicled, albeit the editor may hereafter accuse us of not doing him justice in copying his own language. The sentence is as follows:—

"We repeat, that our strong impression is against the prospect of Mr. Calhoun's nomination. We judge from the information we have received—and we are satisfied that Mr. Calhoun cannot carry Virginia. The more we see, the deeper is our conviction."

We have very little idea that Mr. Calhoun will be the nominee of the National Convention. The proceedings of the Syracuse Convention seem to have given a death-blow to his prospects. Still the possibility of such an event induces us to record the sayings of so eminent and accurate a valticinator as the veteran editor of the Richmond Enquirer. Should Mr. Calhoun receive the nomination, we shall assuredly have Mr. Ritchie out, drums beating and colors flying, forgetting his gloomy predictions of 1843, and informing his democratic readers that Virginia is certain for Calhoun by we know not how many thousand majority. So we may as well preserve the prophecies of this year in lavender, that we may contrast them, if needs be, with those of the next.

☞ With deference to the Bulletin we beg to observe that the Bee has never commented upon or eulogized the paragraph quoted from the New York American.—The sentiments expressed in that paper which we considered creditable to the good sense and patriotic impulses of its editor, were such as would be deemed honorable and just in any man known to be opposed to slavery. They were to the effect that the domestic institutions of the south are guaranteed by the constitution, and that the attempt to assail them in any other than a constitutional and lawful manner, is utterly subversive of every notion of good government and social existence. Such sentiments, we care not whence they emanate, are creditable to their author.

General Bertrand's reception at Baton Rouge was flattering in the extreme. On landing he was surrounded by a large concourse of citizens, eager to grasp the hand of the virtuous and faithful companion of Napoleon. A committee of invitation headed by Hypolite Lanaux, Esq., waited upon the General and accompanied him on a visit to the garrison, where he was saluted by twenty-six guns. He then visited the penitentiary and expressed much pleasure at its interior discipline. After partaking of a collation at the residence of Mr. George Henderson, General Bertrand returned to the boat escorted by a numerous voluntary procession of citizens, and left the town amid the shouts of the assembled multitude.

☞ We have been requested to direct the attention of the proper authorities to the rows and public disturbances which are of frequent occurrence in Franklin street about the neighborhood of Canal and Custom-house. This portion of our city is infested by women of ill-fame, and they, with their paramours, appear with impunity to set at defiance the police and to outrage public order and tranquility. Last Sunday two individuals, while passing the corner of Canal and Franklin streets, casually addressed a word or two to one of the shameless creatures that abound in that vicinity, when they were immediately assailed by a number of loafers and savagely maltreated and beaten. One of the police officers attempted to interfere, but was unable to prevent the fracas. These matters should be looked into. There is a considerable number of respectable families residing around Franklin street, and they are of course grievously annoyed by these intolerable nuisances.

The New York Journal of Commerce says:—"The amount of revenue accruing at our custom house during the current quarter, will probably be larger than in any quarter during the last five years."

In commenting on this fact, the Baltimore American correctly remarks:—"It thus appears that while universal tariff is well adapted for protection it answers most admirably for revenue also. The industry of the country is arousing itself; every branch of business is reviving; new activity is infused into trade; property is appreciating in value; and the same system of well adjusted protective duties which has produced these happy results is also operating to fill the treasury with an abundant revenue.

"Practical results often overthrow the most ingenious theories. The opponents of protection have been in the habit of contending that the moment protection begins in a tariff of impost duties, revenue must cease to a corresponding extent. Hence, according to this theory, protection and revenue are in conflict and cannot be reconciled; yet in point of fact no such difficulty is experienced. The present tariff satisfies the friends of protection and at the same time yields a good revenue."

☞ Our acknowledgments are due to Messrs. Monsar & Shaud, of the Literary Depot, Exchange Place, for copies of Cooper's new novel, The Wyandotte or the Hutted Knoll, and the Miser or Confessions of an Avaricious Man, a tale by Henry D. Inglis, author of a Year in Spain. Both are works highly commended by the northern press.

MR. CLAY A CANDIDATE.—Some of our democratic contemporaries, in reply to the objection to Mr. Van Buren as the democratic candidate, that he has been once defeated, triumphantly ask if Mr. Clay has not been defeated twice?

We will respectfully ask if Mr. Clay has ever been elected, or is ever likely to be.—Madisonian.

No, sir; Mr. Clay has never been defeated as a candidate for the Presidency. When Mr. Adams was first nominated, at the close of Mr. Monroe's administration, after the caucus had been condemned for a long time, a few earnest friends of the tariff nominated Mr. Clay, not with any expectation of electing him, but partly to show the universality of candidate their feelings touching a protective tariff, and partly to injure the votes of certain politicians, who would not vote for Jackson, and could not vote for Adams.

At the next election, Mr. Adams was the candidate against Gen. Jackson, and was defeated.

At the next election, the friends of Mr. Clay rallied in his behalf, but at that time Anti-masonry was rampant, and the party gave up their man, and compromised their principles, and Mr. Wirt was put up, "lamb up."

When Mr. Van Buren became the candidate for the Presidency, he was opposed by Gen Jackson. During the administration of Mr. Van Buren, the friends of Mr. Clay rallied, and were defeated by the election of Harrison. The lustre of Jacksonism had ceased to dazzle. Men began to think, and their sober second thought led them to the conclusion that the Jackson dynasty, continued in Mr. Van Buren's person, was a curse. Hence they came by the lofty eloquence of Mr. Clay, and they fixed on him as the man to redeem the country; and the glorious feeling that was aroused, the generous enthusiasm that was kindled for Mr. Clay and the system. Long before the nomination at Harrisburg, in 1839, was made, the people had resolved on a change, and had resolved to make that change with Clay. The machinery of party was in use, the resolutions for action was formed, and all but the great work itself was done.

When the meeting was held at Harrisburg, no man, unacquainted with certain plots, expected anything but the nomination of Mr. Clay. That great statesman had, without anything like an effort on the part of his friends, a majority of votes in the convention. But treachery was at work. Advantage was taken of the generosity of his temper to induce him to do everything for himself, and a clique in Massachusetts and New York triumphed over right; and we are now reaping the glorious harvest of their sowing. Truly may we exclaim, "an enemy has done this."

A few of their ruling clique are now enjoying their reward in life offices; others are lamenting their fatal error, and a few devising ways and means to renew their treachery.

Mr. Clay has never yet been publicly before the people as a candidate for the Presidency. He will be after the next Presidential election, if he lives.

We have inserted to-day the subject matter over twice before, but it may be right to repeat answers to repeated questions. It is an old remark, that any fool may ask a question that a wise man cannot answer; and before the answer is prepared, the querist is ready with another question.—U. S. Gazette.

☞ The Nashville Union, in speaking of that many colored thing, the standard of locofocoism, says that the motto inscribed on it is "Measures, not men." It then contrasts the "measures" of Harrison—"give us Harrison—give us Clay"—with those of Van Buren—"give us Calhoun—give us Buchanan—give us Cass—give us Johnson—give us any honest, staunch republican, even though we take him from the ranks, like Abe Lincoln of Illinois—"the Rail Splitter"—"the Hero of the West"—"the Mill Boy of the Slashes"—"the Father of the American System"—around our necks."—If we give you Van Buren, we give you negro suffrage and non-consumption; if Calhoun, give you free trade and nullification; if Cass, give you a hot tariff; if Johnson, we give you amalgation, internal improvements, and protection to domestic manufactures. In short, if your candidate is not what you expect, you have a very delightful assortment of "measures" indeed to select from.—Louisville Journal.

RAPID INCREASE OF ENIGHANTS.—A few days since, says the Albany Atlas, as a party of Norse emigrants were coming up the river in a towboat an incident took place which is not an entirely new aspect upon society. A sturdy fellow, who had been bargaining to the pilot, was quietly delivered of three fine girls, much to the joy of all those on board, who manifested their pleasure by shaking up a regular row. It emigrants keep on coming in this way, the granite of the great west will soon be peopled by these industrious Swiss.
