CITY INTELLIGENCE.

HENRY CLAY.—The latest intelligence respecting the友好親切的 relationship between the United States and Mexico, which the Mexican authorities have been endeavoring to sustain by a series of military successes, seems to have been dispelled by the recent defeat of General Vicente Filisola, who has been compelled to retreat before the superior force of General Santa Anna, who has now established his headquarters at Monterrey, and from whence he continues to threaten the Texan frontier. The Mexican authorities, however, still insist that their forces are successful; and that they are rapidly approaching the Texan frontier. The Texan authorities, on the other hand, are equally confident in their power to repel any invasion, and are prepared to meet the Mexicans at the frontier, and to give battle to them.
