Mr. Webster in Boston.

The Boston papers are filled with accounts of the enthusiastic honors paid to Mr. Wespres, by the citizens of Boston, on his arrival at that city, on the 37th ultimo. His fellow-citizens gathered to the number of several thousands around the Worcester Depot, awaiting the Long listand train, by which he was expected to arrive. It was a spontaneous assemblage called together simply by the love and reverence felt for the man by the great mass of the people of Boston. As soon as Mr. Wassers arrived, he was greeted with repeated shouts. A hand of music was in attendance, and amid the marchal strains of a triumphal march, Mr. Wesstras, was seconted to a curriage, which was drawn up in logic of the U. S. Hotel. Here, says the Bening Taylord, the night which met his eye must have been gastlying Indeed. The whole street in front of the Hotel was densely crowded with his fellow-citizens, as were the roofs of the buildings opposite and the steps of the Eotel. The windows of that immense edifice was filled with Indies. After the hearty and repeated chosen of the crowd had subsided, Mr. Quray, Mayor of Boson, from the steps of the Hotel, addressed the and Mr. Wesstra, as follows:
