to the President, he delivered the following address:

We come to you, General, as a remnant of your associates of the war of 1812, to offer to you our helicitations upon your elevation to an afficient without equal in the governments of the world. Your heart will assore you that we have watched your-career wins deep, anxious, and proud interest, from the heroic defence of Fort Harrison, which enred for you the first brevetey in the second war of independence, to the more extended events in Florida and Mexico. We all knew that as the theatre of your operations should be enlarged, you would be equal to any emergency, and would display to your admitting contrymen all the qualities of a great commander.

We come with our hearts in our hands to congratiotate you and our beloved country upon your designation by the people for the highest early position, which we are savered you will adon by the same sagacity, the same partiously, and the same success that was illustrated by your military career; and we hope to be jardoned for saying that your heroism and the same success that was likes child pecking up a pelitic here and there on the shore of the great poinsopher, Sirelmack Newton, who said of himself, that "he felt be was like a child pecking up a pelitic here and there on the shore of the great separations will be for the success of vor administration, and your happiness here and hereafter.
