WHIG MASS MEETING.

The WHIGS of New Orleans will hold a second MASS MEETING at the Pontchartrain Railroad Depot, on THURSDAY EVENING the 14th inst., at half past seven o'clock, at which occasion addresses will be delivered in favor of the Hon. ALEXANDER DECLOUET and DUNCAN F. KENNER, Esq. By request of the Whig Central Executive Committee.

Messrs. Benton and Calhoun.

It is unknown to our readers that the Hon. Thomas Hart Benton is peramb[u]lating the State of Missouri, and addressing the people on every suitable occasion. In fulfilment of his pledge to appeal from the Legislature which enacted the disunion Accomac resolutions, to ratify the Wilmot Proviso, to the great body of his constituency, Senator Benton proceeds with all the activity, vigor, and resource energy which has distinguished him, to carry his determination into effect.

The St. Louis papers publish one of his speeches, delivered at Jefferson city; that is, what was left of it in broken bones, since its colossal dimensions would strangle any man who attempted to swallow it at a single sitting. We have patiently imbibed as much of it as human nature could endure. It is marked in the most peculiar manner with those bold lineaments that impress themselves on all the productions of Mr. Benton. It is elaborate to the last degree, and is filled with bursts of powerful eloquence, with soaring, savage invective; with caustic and caustic-ing sarcasm; with close and severe specifications, and declared proof; with bitter and fierce personalities. It is, in fact, from the commencement to the conclusion, a complete photographic portrait of John C. Calhoun. We have rarely read any thing in print half so full of him as this—no other. The flowers gathered by Mr. Benton to strew the stones of a sepulchre over the Jackson-Calhoun, and Calhoun-Jackson quarrel. Mr. B. indulges him[self] in a biographical sketch of the career of Mr. Calhoun, and argues, that from the [illegible] man who taught him grammar [illegible] to the ear that he should be President. Mr. Calhoun has failed for the fulfilment of the prediction. Mr. Benton alleges that a movement made by Calhoun, from the seat of a National Bank and Protective Policy down to the present attempt to dissolve the Union upon the slavery question, has been made without rest and excuse or justification. He is getting short of breath, we perceive, by the time he has come to the end of his charges. The work is done with a master hand, and is pervaded throughout with an intense vindictiveness that bids fair to portion of his speech glow, he reads it. After glancing down his history to the present time, Mr. Benton declares that the Democratic party can never be defeated in Missouri, and that it is only by Democratic party that the Democratic party can be defeated in Missouri, and that it is only by Democratic party that the Democratic party can be defeated in Missouri, and that it is only by Democratic party that the Democratic party can
