CALIFORNIA.

Sixteen Days' Later Intelligence.

The towboat Yankee arrived yesterday from the South West Pass, bringing the Pacific mails by the steamship Falcon. Our dates from California are to the 14th June, inclusive. The papers contain a mass of intelligence, though nothing of paramount importance.

The San Franc sco Courier, under the editorial auspices of Mr. CRANE, has revived, P hoenix like, from its ashes.

We are sorry to say there is little appearance of activity in trade and commerce. The Herald says:

The merchants, in order to effect sales, have had recourse to the auction houses, and the consequence has been that large quantities of goods have been disposed of at various prices, often entirely cutting off the legitimate operations of our commercial houses. As long as the state of things lasts, no improvement can be expected, and we cannot look for an immediate change. A great portion of the community, by the purchase of re-buildings, and from the sacrifice of their accustomed facilities, have been placed in the position of being obliged to force upon their stocks, regardless of the sacrifice it entailed. Again, agents of parties are constantly receiving fresh goods, and from a desire to keep their stocks within a reasonable limit, they are forced to the end of the auctions, from a perfect inability to send the parties back without

How long it will take to satisfy the requirements of immediate sellers, it is impossible to foretell, but the looked for improvements in the value of the leading articles after the first rush has been a thing but realized, and it only requires a reference to our quotations to show that the average is generally below what it then was. The fact is, that the consumption in the cities and large towns, where there is an abundant supply, and as the common custom to all parts of the mining region as good as any season of the year, no extraordinary demand can be looked for in trade until the approach of winter. Our present favorable circumstances then upon a basis of the impending consequent lowering of prices, and a consequent increase of confidence. The result of these will be observable within a month, as others will quickly follow.

In closing the commercial aspect, in the interest, we are constrained to say that a spirit of reckless speculation is rife in many localities at the present time, and we caution the public against the operations of such parties. We are determined to sell by auction, and invest the unfortunate man in his purchase on credit. He added the people where the action of the committee was satisfactory.

A voice in the crowd.—Who is the speaker?

Mr. Bateman was named.

Another Voice.—Who are the committee?

This was answered with the cry of "no names," and the crowd broke up. A large portion repaired to the Plaza, others rang behind to see the prisoner taken off.

The committee pursue the revolting history of the subsequent details. The man was found on the old Adobe house, at the corner of Jackson and Kearny streets, about two and a half feet from the ground. He was found by Mr. Virgin, who keeps a boarding house in Washington block on Long wharf. In the absence of the proprietor, he had a sale
