A FRANK ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

In the course of a recent debate in the United States Senate, in which the subject of Wm. Walker's marauding expedition to Lower California was referred to, Mr. Gwin took occasion to limn a portrait of his constituents, for which, how faithful soever it may be, they are unlikely to be very thankful. Mr. Gwin said that the only law executed in California was the one taxing the people, and collecting the revenue from them. He remarked with considerable coolness that proclamations against lawless and piratical invasions of neighboring territories were of no earthly use in California, leaving the inference that the model citizens of that State could only be restrained from their lawless propensities by the strong arm of overbearing power. He warned the country that unless the power of government was efficiently exercised, they could not expect the citizens of California to stand still when they were invited into those magnificent countries, and when they could get munificent rewards for them with the will of the inhabitants by taking them with the will of the inhabitants by taking them with the will of the inhabitants by taking
