A SUGGESTION.

It has been suggested to us, that as Alderman CALDWELL, ADAMS and LEWIS appear to be particularly desirous of testing popular sentiment in the First District—so desirous, indeed, as in defiance of fairness and propriety, to have pronounced without investigation, the late election null and void, these gentlemen should be respectfully invited to resign their seats and submit their claims for re-election to the suffrages of the people of that district. The idea strikes us as eminently felicitous. Messrs. ADAMS, CALDWELL and LEWIS are no doubt pamphlet astronomy in the armor of Democracy, that they can at all times entertain the most limbiest confidence in the wisdom and judgment of their fellow citizens.

We think that if Messrs ADAMS, CALDWELL and LEWIS will only give the good people of the First District a chance to decide upon their merits at the same polls at which they were called upon to elect three aldermen in place of those whose election has been declared null, they (Messrs A C & L) will have an opportunity at once of avenging the fervor of their faith in Democratic principles, and of proving that they do not dread the popular verdict. Democrats, it is said, are in favor of the doctrine of instructions. The late election demonstrated very convincingly that a majority of the voters of New Orleans are opposed to the party secession recently executed in the Common Council and is equivalent to instructing the aldermen holding over seats to obey the fiat of the people or to resign. But the aforesaid aldermen being partisans are averse to any appreciable, wise advice. Well, then, let them resign, and appeal to the ballot-box to do them justice. We doubt not they would receive it, in ample form. Let them make the experiment. We guarantee such a manifestation of popular sentiment, as will satisfy these incredulous gentlemen that when the people voted for Reform in March, they were entirely in earnest.

Come, Messrs. Aldermen of the First District. Make your vacancy good. Evince your unabated trust in Democracy. Let the people, whom you profess to represent, but whom, as we believe, you misrepresent, have as opportunity of showing what they think of your conduct. Have the courage to be consistent as true believers. Do not mourn Democracy with empty appearance, but appeal practically by deeds true to its tenets. If you are not afraid of being defeated, you should unhesitatingly, as good Democrats, submit your new mandate to the scrutiny of those who elected you, and abide by their verdict.

☞ It is a precious commentary on the counsel of the present administration, that in New England in which alone State elections have been held within the last three or four months, not a single State ticket headed by the party in power. Maine led off by electing a Whig Legislature, which in its turn chose Whig State officers, and sent a Whig United States Senator to Washington. New Hampshire followed, and in the commonwealth that gave birth to democracy have received wholesale rebukes from a democratic people. Connecticut, in which last year their majority was over a thousand, while it is absolutely certain that a majority of the leading administration men can be elected to the U.S. Senate. Connecticut never spoke, and then the result of PIERCE'S party is overwhelming—a Whig Governor, associate Judges of the Supreme Court, and an immense majority of opposition members. Finally comes Rhode Island, which has become a complete portrait of revolution and a large majority to the whig ticket.

The extraordinary result means something. It is useless to pass them over lightly, or to seek to explain them away. Our views may be right, and the country may be wrong. We may misconstrue them as the natural consequence of the policy of Gen PIERCE and believe they signify that they have been measured, and found wanting in boldness and honesty, or they may be the result of party tactics, or a combination of both. But whatever be the cause, the fact is undeniable, that the people of the whole North, and the West, have rebuked the administration of Gen PIERCE.

Returns of the vote for Governor in the whole State have been received:

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1854.

The Senate has been assiduously engaged in secret session nearly the whole time for several days past, upon the Gadsden treaty, which received its death blow yesterday, and will probably be rejected by a final vote on Monday next. A test vote was taken yesterday, which showed that not two thirds of the Senators were in favor of it; and I suspect but a little more than half.

Senators may be mistaken, but the idea is entertained by them, and nothing but clear, distinct, unity proof to the contrary can drive it from their heads, that there has been gross corruption in the formation of this treaty. That improper influences have been exerted in bringing it about, and improper objects are to be accomplished by its ratification. It is intimated that if the public knew all that Senators know in regard to the treaty, &c., that if the documents and evidences in their possession could be published, they would excite no little feeling and indignation. But on whom breaks this would fall, who are suspected of being guilty of corruption, I am utterly ignorant.

The Nebraska question is still the main topic of discussion in the House, notwithstanding neither its own nor the Senate bill have been or can be reached for a long time to come. Whether those who are making speeches upon the subject have any hope of 'em, as the case may b, that the bill may be reached and they may be called upon to record their votes upon it, one way or the other, I know not, being relieved with speeches upon the subject, and it being a quest on which now deeply agitates the public mind to many if not all parts of the country, they wish to fail in with the prevailing current of public opinion at home. I cannot undertake to say; but as the question is now undergoing pretty thorough discussion among the people, it is to be expected that it will for the present at least, form the chief topic of debate in the popular branch of the national legislature.

It called upon to give an opinion as to the probable fate of the bill, I should say that it would have little chance of being passed in any shape whatever. The feeling at the North, and at the West upon the subject, the almost unanimous opposition the proposition to repeal the Missouri Compromise there meets with—the result of the elections in New York, Ohio, Connecticut and Rhode Island; the election of a Whig Senator from the old democratic State of Maine, and the gaining of votes in the Municipal elections in Detroit, Rochester, Salem, and some other cities—all these things are signs which members of Congress are not likely to overlook or disregard. Which feeling must all exert a very powerful influence in determining the bill, probably not by direct but by indirect pressure.

The passage of the bill is undoubtedly most ardently desired by Mr. Seward, Mr. Chase, Mr. Sumner, Mr. Giddings, and all that class of men, however warmers they may seem to oppose it. The first names of these prominent and distinguished men, and others, at the commencement of the present session of Congress, in a fair way of going into "a state of recess."

But this measure has put him upon his feet again, and it now stands as the head of the great candidate of our party, for governor of New York; in order to show the people of the United States, as I suppose, that there is still enough to carry the Empire State. I for should be the candidate, and be elected, he may ten t Mr Douglas his hat and a vote of thanks.

The President's message upon the Black Warrior affair, still sleeps in the cradle of the Committee on Foreign Relations; which does not look as if that Committee or Congress had any very serious notion of involving the country in a war with Spain. Some hints in the nature of threats have been thrown out in the Senate, that by early alienation of the Gadsden treaty was, a war with Mexico. But these hints, or threats, whichever they were intended to be, only excited a little laugh at discretion from the opponents of the treaty. The truth is, any sort of threats from so much spirit as weak, cowardising and puerile as this, are rather a subject of mirth than of serious consideration with all parties.

The Home stead bill will not be taken up in the Senate for some time to come; but will be taken up will most with the most decided opposition from most Senators as well as North ern Senators. I am in no manner sanguine under one of the present circumstances, that it will be decided to its final passage.

The very ingenuated and insolent manner in which Mr Fillmore was received by your city, is very gratifying to the friends of Gen Pierce here.

MAISON ROUGE.

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1854

It is understood that Mr. Forney, clerk of the House of Representatives will soon retain that office and become Editor of the chief organ of the administration.

Forney is pretty good at getting up whose and now has a chance to sustain a bad cause, but we will find it quite a different matter to call on the people to support Frank Pierce's administration, as it was to get a sensible man at Washington. If there is a single man in the country that has the strength to do it, I know not. They may rally, or they may not, the whole machinery and sectional issues of the day are against the present power. But every individual strength is to be used in the course of events as it may be to satisfy the party managers.

DEATH OF JOHN GRIGG.—We were greatly shocked on morning the unexpected death of Mr. GRIGG, a member of the bar of New Orleans, well known in our community for many years past, and highly esteemed for his many excellent qualities of head and heart. He was expressed as Grand Master Mason of Louisiana, and a true article of friendship he was indeed.

☞ We take great pleasure in publishing the following sweet and graceful effusion, from the pen of a gifted lady of the South:

The West Indian Evening.

BY MRS. D. K. WHITAKER.

I remember a clime where mild evening sky
Commingles with gold its dark purple dye,
The hue of the topaz and sapphire are seen
With pearl mixt translucent and emerald green,
Where, caressing our ocean, a while trackless way,
Cool winds murmur gently at close of the day.

How pure is their breath, reviving and sweet!
The withering branches, late drooping from heat,
Look up with new vigor, and, through the tall grove,
The gay birds are flying where late them to rove,—
Low bulbuls are laving the silvery strand,
And ocean's wild music resounds on the land.

How twinkle the stars from their blue vaulted height,
In countless array, round the queen of the night!
As o'er-same clouds float past like a veil,
And render her visage a moment more pale,
They roll slow y by,—intensely she gleams,
Distinct grows the scene by her magical beams.

There stand lofty trees in luxuriant pride,
And rich tropic fruits their dark branches hide,
There, wreathed in thick masses, the flowerdeck'd vine
Round their rough trunks colossal its tendrils doth twine.

The white rocks look fantastic from downward severe,
And smooth plains and noun-tains sing in rising there.

How calmly it steers yon vessel the wave!
Her bearing is noble,—she carries the brave,
Her bold prow subduing the white flowing spray,
Her dark keep sink of by salt ocean's spray.
Be cautious, ye mariners,—ah Rocky shore,
Death lurks on you jagged, and destruction is near.

Ah, shoreless is beneath the shimmering sea,
He may as brave as he please, as free,—
Cold waters enwrap them,—their funeral wail
Is sung in loud notes by the hollow-voiced gale,
But they heed not its sounds, for dead is their ear,
The death-summary sleeps on its cold pillow there.

And under yon palm tree's wavering shade,
Where cocoa-nuts in clusters are ripening fair,
Fer,—fair to the hunted he loves and his birth,—
Wait hosts with Heroes on the bosom of earth,—
Tell the last tramp resounds, the rest will be deep,
Who repose on the land,—in ocean who sleep.

A TRAGICAL AFFAIR.

Our readers no doubt recollect the circumstances connected with the very severe beating and cutting inflicted upon Mr. Hoffman of St. Louis by Mr. Baker, first named in a letter from the former had persecuted with dishonorable addresses. It appears that Hoffman having recovered from his cruel maltreatment was, on the 15th inst., walking along Fourth street, when he was met by Mrs. Baker, who pursued him armed with a revolver, into the dry goods establishment of J. B. Simpson & Co. Mr. Hoffman gives the annexed account of this affair:

Mr. Simpson and those in his employ state that Hoffman came running into the store, apparently greatly fatigued, pursued by Mrs. Baker with a revolving pistol in her hand, and that Hoffman was crying for help and protection, when about the middle of the store Mrs. Baker dis harged one barrel, and Hoffman ran around the counter and stooped down, placing his head under the counter. Mrs. Baker then leaned over the counter and placed the pistol over his body, fired again. She was then pulled from the counter by Mr. Simpson, and the pistol taken from her. The last ball took effect, and Hoffman exclaimed, "I shot, you are an unnatural woman," or some words to that effect. He was immediately raised from the floor and placed upon the counter, when Mrs Baker in the meantime, ran to the forward a few paces to the front of the store and out down with her back towards the wounded man. We understand that Mr Hoffman expressed a desire to speak to her before he died. In a short time afterwards medical aid was called in and he was removed into the office of Dr J B Johnson. The testimony of the doctor and the same hattening. When his wound was dressed and an investigation had by Dr Johnson, Alderman Bowman, &c. It was ascertained from being conveyed from the store, he addressed Mrs Baker and said "Mary, I forgive you."—Deputy Marshals Mr Conner and Officer Hall on the scene arrived and took charge of Mrs Baker, who all the time remained in the store, the dying man's head having been kept up by the lap of a lady. Mrs Baker was then conveyed to the calaboose, where she remained for the night. Hoffman's wounds are very severe, and it is thought by the physicians that he cannot recover. Mrs. Baker was examined before Justice Lusher, and committed to prison to await the action of the Grand Jury.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—Dr. Tastet, a resident of Woodbury, Baltimore county, but formerly of Washington, recently met with a sudden and melancholy death in the city of Baltimore. The Clipper says: "The doctor had occasion to visit this city on Monday, 3d inst., and whilst riding his horse leisurely on Calhoun street, near the Baltimore depot and Biddle street, the animal stumbled over the iron rail of one of the numerous switches in that vicinity, throwing the doctor and afterwards falling on him, causing concussion of the brain, and other, it is presumed, fatal internal injuries, from the effects of which he did not rally, and death ensued between twelve and one o'clock the same night."

STEAMBOAT SUNK.—The steamer Eliza No. 2, Captain Bennett, from Columbus for Mobile, struck a snag a few days since, while twenty-five miles below the former sunk. She had a full load of cotton on board, all of which was saved with the exception of some slightly hurt in the hold. She will prove a total loss. The Sallie Spann arrived yesterday with part of her cargo and passengers. The Spann reports three feet water in the Red River Cut-off and the river falling rapidly.—Mobile Advertiser.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—The receipts in March amounted to only $738 67, and the expenditures to $2,980 72.

Professor Morse's Invigorating Elixir and Cordial.

As a protector against contagious and infectious diseases there is nothing like brewing up the nutritious, muscular and digestive elements. If these are in perfect order, the human frame is a temple of strength almost impregnable to disease. Morse's Invigorating Elixir and Cordial will bring every organ, every nerve, every muscle into a condition of perfect vigor, and the healthy principle of perspiration will neutralize every unhealthy tendency in the fluids of the body, and purify and regulate the circulation of the same. Those who suffer from nervousness, trembling, hysteria, dyspepsia, liver complaint, general debility, loss of spirits, or any other disease or infirmity consequent upon the disorders of action or torpidity of any organ up n the regularity of which general health depends, this preparation is recommended as a sovereign and safe specific—free from every mineral ingredient, and eminently comfortable to the most delicate stomach. Call and get a pamphlet, which will find it to contain much valuable information in regard to the various disorders to which their sex is subject.

The Cordial is put up, highly concentrated, in pint bottles. Price two dollars per bottle, two for five dollars, as for the directions.
