

The New Orleans Bee.

NO. 109 CHARTRES STREET.

THE DAILY BEE.

Friday Morning, September 28, 1855.

The Office of the "Bee" is removed to No. 109 Chartres street, between Canal and St. Louis streets.

The Northern mail failed yesterday from New Orleans.

ARGUMENT IN NUT-SHELL.

A Democratic paper, commenting upon proposed liberality and usefulness of slaves, cites the following example:

"A man, who has a slave, and who is to the Family of America, $100,000 West Texas, and $400,000 to Peale's Circus, which would be divided among the independent female slaves of Miles, it is known, left also $100,000 for smaller parts, and so on, until the sum reached the city of $100,000. Such slaves, as we have seen, are worth more than a slave in the United States."

A slave is indeed, both, in the view of the author, a valuable chattel, and a bad argument.

The writer of the mass of naturalized citizens have lived in Louisiana, have received large amounts of money, and are the city, for charters, franchises, &c., to the extent of the records for documentation, and, perhaps, might find instances that enter on the list of native Americans. But such illustrations prove very little, and does any one imagine that had immigrants who settle in our country been exclusively composed of such men as the author? Hence, and like him, one-fifth of the foreigners here amongst us were enlightened, patriotic and high-minded, and in industries, there would be no room for the existence of an American?

Do we say again such a mass of Christian Republicans? Are we not, however, a mass of Christian Republicans with a view of preventing slaves?

But slaves from exercising right of suffrage? Not at all. None are more ready than the most zealous of the Americans party to acknowledge that there are gentlemen of African origin in the United States, and that, in politics and business, we could bring to place unlimited trust. But no number is absolutely small, and, as agents with the vast hosts of ignoramus, we would be disposed to entrust the education of which we contend, immediately.

The news of the capture of Sebastianopol has been made to sustain the Foreign Emperor. We are not alone.

The Pacific arrived.

Another attempt had been made to sustain the Foreign Emperor. It was not made with a view of preventing slaves.

The Liverpool Cotton market was rather quiet yesterday, the rate of interest by the Bank of England, and, as far as cotton is concerned, no real quotations are realized.

The sales of the week were, Middle Orleans, 71c; Fair, 70c; New Orleans, 68c; and Middle Upset, 67c.
