THE DAILY BEE.
TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 29, 1866.
OFFICE 83 CHARTRES ST.

Final Reports of Lord Clarendon.

The main fact of importance that we draw from the despatches of Lord Clarendon is the assurance conveyed to us that the Alabama claims question is considered by the British Government as settled. Lord Clarendon's despatch of the 4th January, 1866, to Mr. Adams, is a clear, strong and able statement of the case, and a complete refutation of the charges preferred by our government against that of Great Britain. Mr. Seward's despatch of the 7th November, 1865, to Mr. Adams, is a labored effort to make out a case against Great Britain, which, as Lord Clarendon says, is not to be found in the whole correspondence. Mr. Seward's despatch is a long and tedious argument, which, if it proves anything, proves that Great Britain has been guilty of a breach of international law, in not preventing the escape of the Alabama from Liverpool, and in not detaining her after she had escaped. Lord Clarendon's despatch is a clear, able and conclusive refutation of the charges preferred by our government, and a triumphant vindication of the course of Great Britain. Mr. Seward's despatch is a labored effort to make out a case against Great Britain, which, as Lord Clarendon says, is not to be found in the whole correspondence. Mr. Seward's despatch is a long and tedious argument, which, if it proves anything, proves that Great Britain has been guilty of a breach of international law, in not preventing the escape of the Alabama from Liverpool, and in not detaining her after she had escaped. Lord Clarendon's despatch is a clear, strong and able statement of the case, and a complete refutation of the charges preferred by our government against that of Great Britain