LETTERS IN EUROPE.

To readers with discriminating taste, as there are comparatively few to be found in this country, the relations of travel are, in many cases, very important, that, when a traveller undertakes to write about transactions which he has seen, he ought to cast out of his letters all that is personal. The present is a remark which a European history, or work of art, is effected by the diplomatic intrigue, or the exciting progress and success of a battle, however and the deep interpretation of character, or rise to commanding heights of discussion, are not requisite to make a letter interesting and in the interim exist. French impressions, unstable people, while Germans are to occupy themselves about, though not known as dull, they have lost the spirit and interest in literature which they possessed in a former age. Europe is super-excited, every country is in a state of political progress, every people has its policy and its party, and has a right to be heard. In short, everybody is a politician, and everybody is deeply interested in politics, as they affect Great Britain, France, Russia, Austria, Prussia, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and the United States. Every one of these countries is at present in a state of political progress, and has a right to be heard. In short, everybody is a politician, and everybody is deeply interested in politics, as they affect Great Britain, France, Russia, Austria, Prussia, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and the United States. Spinning Cotton on Plantations.

The recent invention of Mr. George G. Henry, for spinning cotton before it leaves the plantation, is considered by those skilled in such matters to be second only in importance to the invention of the cotton gin. Should the invention accomplish only the half for which it is designed, the result will be an immense increase in the value of the cotton crop to the South, and a great addition to the wealth of the country. We find in the New York Journal of Commerce, an interesting communication from "Spinner," which gives an account of the modus operandi of the machine, particularizing the benefits to accrue from it. By the present process of preparing cotton for market, it is taken more or less leaf, trash, &c., which the ginned lint becomes entangled and matted together in baling, so that before it can be spun it is necessary to put it through several machines in order to disentangle it and remove the foreign substances. To do this it is first run through a machine called a picker, with a cylinder that revolves three hundred times a minute, and is armed with strong iron teeth. It is then taken through the lap machines, which have each three cylinders, revolving about twenty-two hundred times a minute. The fiber is passed through two of these in succession, whence it is taken to a set of carders, and often through another set to finish it for the drawing, heads, &c.

Late improvements consist in attaching the lap machine to the gin, and so arranging the carding machinery in connection, that from the gin and up the cotton is taken on through the different machines used in the process of spinning without any handling from the time it enters the gin until the yarn is put into rolls. Among advantages of this process is the fact that the gin is not required to run over one third the quantity of cotton that it does now, because there will be no necessity for the present haste to get it to market, and thus the gin will do its work much better, to the improvement of the cotton. The cotton, as now thrown out from the gin, is in a very open, straight and flexy condition, and by the present improvement, will be taken in that condition direct from the gin, and passed on through the lap and other preparation and spun, without losing, and in a measure being baled, or repressed, &c. Says the writer:

"It will strike every one very forcibly, that taking the fiber when thus open and straight, we have the important advantage of it, as the fiber has not grasped or tangled itself about them, the trash and impurities fall readily, freely and naturally, from the fibers, precluding the necessity of the tearing, lapping and pulverizing manipulation now required to cleanse and open it; and with all which, it is very imperfectly done. Besides, taking the cotton just from the seed, it is oily and elastic, and works far more kindly into yarn than it ever afterwards will. It must be here stated, that in running the cotton through the gin as rapidly as it does now, the necessary effect of using it through the pickers in the cotton factories to open and disentangle it, and the carders to finish it, is to subject it to an undergo in the further operations of the beating in the lap machine, and extra carding, besides the ascertained large amount of waste, some seventeen per cent., which now flies off in consequence of this treatment, a large quantity of broken up, mutilated, and intermingled trash and fiber eaters into the yarn, and of which it is largely composed."

And herein stands out in bold relief the great improvement that the waste by Mr. Henry's process is diminished at least ten per cent., and the yarn being made of comparatively unbroken and unmutilated fiber, is in itself stronger, and finer yarns can be made out of it with greater ease. We all know the length of the fiber is what gives strength to the yarn—and the less its manipulation the less the fiber breaks, and this less of the downy substance by which it is aerated you remark. And this downy substance may be ascribed the adhesion or affinity of fiber for fiber, which makes the yarn of cotton the king of textiles.

By this invention it is claimed there can be manufactured a yarn fifty per cent. better than can be made by present methods, and which will secure the best market of the day, defying competition. The machinery can be conveniently arranged on the platform, where the cotton is ginned, and very little additional power to that which gins the cotton will suffice to spin it also. One skillful carder and spinner can superintend half a dozen plantations, while the women and children on each plantation will be sufficient to spin off the crop. Among other improvements resulting from the invention, the following are enumerated:

"Cotton being spun into yarns, is so compressed that the same number of pounds that now covers one steamboat, will enable it to wear and tire, can, on the same sized boat, be stowed and protected nicely under the hatches. Besides, cotton, is not extra hazardous, and insurance will lessen on it. The freight and general charges being on the pound, as they will be on an article, doubled in value, will be reduced in the descending ratio one half. Soud by numbers in the ports, its frequent sampling and turning out for examination, &c., will be discontinued. There is deducted from the price which the planter receives for his cotton, whenever he sells, all the losses and charges on it, until it reaches Manchester, and also the estimated waste on it there, while it is being converted into yarn. Hence, a system which saves ten per cent. of waste is equivalent to adding ten bales to every hundred of the crop. Besides, the saving of charges, perhaps ten per cent. more, together with other strong considerations, the motive to determine the planter to the manufacture of his cotton into yarns and the advantage to consumers is that the saving of ten per cent. of waste is equivalent to an increase of the American crop of one million bales per annum."

Mr. Henry's arrangement is not difficult to adopt, as the cost of the machinery for that whole plantation is not equal to the enhanced value of the first crop spun.—Memphis Eagle.

Mr. Willis, in a letter to the Home Journal, tells the story of Bayard Taylor's new home in Germany. While a German gentleman who had been his traveling companion in the East he had formed one of those friendships of which we have been speaking, as implies the interchange of magnetic recognition and trust. They were together in scenes far remote from both their homes, and their acquaintance, brief as it was, was yet knit by unusual associations and by a sympathy that has been reciprocally complete. They parted, each to return to his own land, but without promise of correspondence; and it was some time before Bayard heard from his German friend. The manner when it came was startling, however. It was a formal invitation to him of an estate, to belong to him and to his heirs. a free gift, and given irrevocably, as a pledge and token of friendship. The grounds were complete, the house furnished.

ASSIGNEE OF TALLEYRAND.—At the recent meeting of the Association of Soldiers of 1813 for the District of Columbia, a letter was presented by Captain De la Roche, which was written by the celebrated M. Talleyrand, representing himself as a shop-keeper in this country.

Dr. Caldwell remarked that the mention of the name of Talleyrand reminded him of an anecdote of that distinguished man, which, as it would also as well apply to this association, he would relate. It was: When Earl Grey was Prime Minister of England Talleyrand was the representative of France at that Court, where he took occasion to predict to Grey that the Ministry of England would not last long." When the reason for this pragmatical prediction was demanded of the Whig courtier, he replied, "It was because it was already Grey."

LIVERPOOL AND PORTLAND LINE OF STEAMERS.—The State of Maine announces the establishment of the Liverpool and Portland line of steamers—touching at St. Johns, N. F., and Halifax. Information was received by the last arrival from Europe to the effect that plans have been matured and arrangements made for the maintenance of the line, commencing on the 7th of March, with the Caledonian, a screw propeller of 2300 tons, having engines of 350 horse power. She will be followed four weeks later by the Khersonese. The trips will be monthly.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.—Mr. COLLINS, agent and collector for the N. Y. Albion, has presented us with an exquisite engraving of FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE—that pattern of female devotion, intrepidity and disinterestedness. It is a splendid print, of large size, and suitable for framing. It embodies a view of Constantinople, and a fore-ground of the Hospital at Scutari, engraved in line by W. WELLSTOOD, and copied from an original drawing made for the Albion by J. B. WARNSWORTH. This engraving is beautiful as a work of art, and highly appropriate as a New Year's gift to the numerous subscribers of the Albion.

Child-Murderers.

This term may be properly applied to intestinal worms. The moment their presence is suspected, that great expository remedy, Wiser's Blandish Tar-sulfuge, should be given. It is at once a safe and thorough medicine. No mineral poisons is included in its composition. It is mild in its operation. The most delicate child may take it without danger, and few if there are, will be found to object to it. Its laxative properties and soothing influence on the membrane of the bowels cannot fail to be beneficial. In particular and remember the name—Wiser's Canadian Vermifuge.* This is the only article that can be depended on—remember this.

City Intelligence.

ARRESTS.—We noticed only two arrests of any importance on the police records yesterday. Martin McMorris, in the First District, for an alleged breach of trust, and Pat. Smith, in the Third District, for being a plaintiff in a case of Jim Kelly's stabbing.

THE CITY WORKHOUSE.—The keeper of the City Workhouse, Capt. Brown, resigned his charge of the institution on the 5th inst., and the Mayor has made a temporary appointment for its management until the next meeting of the City Council. We are unadvised as to whether the new keeper will be paid by the day, or have a salary. Capt. Brown has given up his charge of the institution. We feel assured that he has endeavored honestly to discharge his duty; first, to himself as a means of support for his family, and secondly, and as far as consistent with this duty, in making the institution a school of public reformation for the idle and vicious of the city.

ASSAULT OF HONOR.—Alexander Baldwin, John Pascal and Emile Fernandez were held to bail last Saturday by Assistant Recorder Holland, of the Second District, to answer to a charge of having gone to the residence of Augustin L. Marois, on Robertson street, intimidated him in his bed with deadly weapons, and committed a violent assault and battery on his person. We hear that the reason for this demonstration is, that Marquez had been the cause of the arrest of one of the party for a bad character, to the daughter of one of the attacking parties. The accused gave bail for their appearance.

HOTEL THIEVES.—A boy, who gave his name as Charles Valentine, was arrested late on Friday night at the St. Charles Hotel, under suspicious circumstances, and locked up until Saturday morning, when he was handed over to the police for examination before Recorder Bath. He was found in one of the rooms without being able to give any satisfactory explanation of his being there, except that he was drunk. He had a pass-key with him which he had used to open the door, and, it is said, he had opened the trunk of a lady, and taken therefrom a diamond breast-pin valued at $800.

Charles Valentine was last Saturday arraigned before Recorder Bath on the charge, made by Mr. Hildreth, of the St. Charles Hotel, of having broken open several trunks in the hotel and stealing a gold watch and chain, a revolver, and other articles, valued at $175. The revolver was found on a bootblack, where the accused had pawned it. He was held in $1000 to answer, on the 9th inst., and also in $350 to answer, on the same day, the charge of carrying concealed weapons and of being a dangerous and suspicious character. His accomplice, Kunase, alias Henderson, has not yet been arrested.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT—Judge J. B. Robertson. William Prickett, found guilty of larceny, was sentenced to Saturday, to two years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. A boy, a mere lad, charged with a similar offense, was sent for one year to the same institution.

Peter Byrne was fined $10 for assault and battery.

The rule for a new trial for Richard Scott, twice convicted of the murder of his wife, was dismissed.

John Cooey, John Corbe, and James Condon, alias Tucker Condon, alias Sanbrah, were arraigned for carrying concealed weapons, plead not guilty, and were released on bonds, to await trial.

There were ten arraignments for assault and battery, and half a dozen persons charged with the same offense were discharged.

Subpœnas were issued, commanding Adam Gibson, City Treasurer, and Thomas Hays to bring into court, on Wednesday next, for the trial of Mr. Hall, all the sundry books wherein the city accounts have been kept since 1846.

James Costelloe, charged with assault, with intent to kill, and Louis Gerwig, with assault with a dangerous weapon, were discharged from custody.

REPREHENSIBLE CONDUCT.—An affidavit was made last week before Assistant Recorder Holland, of the Second District, in which the occupant of a house on Canal street, between Carondelet and Baronne, charge of "keeping a disorderly establishment," and of having assaulted and beaten him. The Second District police extorted from her, through a female witness who was not a member of the police, the sum of $5, with the promise that the police should not again molest her in her business. For some reason or other she never got everything which constitutes a religious impression extreme illness and the near prospect of death had made upon the girl, said to her, "Sally, what were your thoughts and feelings when you believed yourself about to die?" "Ah! missus," said Sally, "I was sorry to find how much money I gone lost by me."

A negro fisherman in Norfolk, Virginia, came one day to his master, and said: "Mos-sa, I want to buy myself and family for five hundred dollars, sir: I will pay you de money, and you de best in de market, sir." "Very well, Tom," said his master, "you have been a faithful fellow, and I will cheerfully grant your wish." The money was accordingly paid, and the inchoate freedom of Tom commenced. A few days afterwards Tom went out to fish, in company with a fellow-servant, and there came up a blow, which capsized the fishing smack, and drowned the fellow-companion. The next day, Tom came to his master, and said: "Mossa, I change my mind, sir; I don't want to buy myself any more, sir—please pay me back my money, sir." "Why, Tom," said his master, "you have already paid a large portion of your price, and, by industry and your profitable calling, you will soon earn the rest; the residue; and you had better carry out your original intention." "No Mossa," was Tom's economical response, "I rather have my money back—nigger property too uncertain, sir." Matters were accordingly put on a state quo, and Tom abandoned all chance of being a freed man, and quietly and unhesitatingly returned to the condition of a slave, being unwilling to fish, on his own hook, in the troubled and perilous waters of freedom.

DRINKING AT DINNER.—Not seldom do we hear the opinion advanced, that drinking during a meal is an obnoxious habit; but quite wrongfully, for the gastric juice may be diluted with a considerable quantity of water without losing its dissolving power in the slightest degree. Only a superabundance of water would diminish or arrest the peculiar action of the matters contained in the digestive fluids in large draughts of water, therefore, will be the most injurious with aliments difficult of digestion, like the fat; and hence the drinking for much and water after fat pork, for instance, is properly avoided: but in countries where soup with rice, &c., constitute a regular part of the meal, drinking water is positively to be commended. Beer and wine at dinner are also harmful only if taken in excess; for in the latter case the alcohol of the wine coagulates the albuminous substances, not only of the food, but also of the digestive fluids, and then disturbs digestion. If taken in a moderate quantity, these beverages are calculated to cause the meat to hold out longer; for the fact that we are not so soon hungry again after a meal with wine than if we have taken only water with it, is to be accounted for by the slower combustion of the constituents of our body, inasmuch as the alcohol we imbibe takes possession of the inhaled oxygen. Hence, also with a meal is extremely useful when a long journey is undertaken, for example, since it impossible to take food again at the usual time; so much the more so, as such detention from food itself usually causes an acceleration of the metamorphosis of the tissues, which beer and wine efficiently obviate.—Orr's Chemistry of Food and Diet.

A BLUNDER EDITORIAL.—The Missouri Democrat, in its Christmas editorial, evidently took that day for Good Friday. It remarks, rather inconsistently, we think, that "it was the philosophy of human happiness, that we see portrayed in the most exalted shape in this anniversary, commemorative of the death of the Messiah!" And yet the Democrat speaks of "happy, smiling faces, and social festive boards—kindly greeting, and mirth and music, and glad laughter, and light-hearted rejoicing everywhere prevailing." Rather heathenish that for the St. Louis people—their best friend dead—(perhaps, however, least appreciated)—and they in a rejoicing mood!

THE THEORY OF THE EYES.—The new number of the Quarterly Review says: "Dark blue eyes are the common property of delicate, refined, or effeminate nature; light blue, and, much more, gray eyes, in the hardy and active. Greenish eyes have generally the same meaning as the gray; but eyes are the more usual indications of a mixed, masculine, vigorous and profound. Shakespeare, it is said, liked hazel eyes; Swift, blue eyes; Milton, Scott and Byron, gray eyes."
