HONESTY, NERVE AND PATRIOTISM.

A correspondent of the Memphis Eagle has cited upon Mr. FILLMORE, and that gentleman, in the course of conversation, alluding to the nervous cases in Congress, and to the excitement in New York, environ Mr. BUCHANAN, remarked "there was no cause for excitement in positions of this character, if a man possessed an honesty, nerve and patriotism, and he thought Mr. BUCHANAN would have these qualities. If Mr. FILLMORE could have the observation is highly complimentary.

These qualities and positions are indeed of that high order which should distinguish the head of the American people at this period of our national existence; and we are pleased to learn that Mr. FILLMORE does not consider the President with these qualities of a wise and virtuous ruler merely any period in our history, but one which requires and makes integrity and patriotism the leading principle of the man who holds in the hands the destinies and prosperity of a nation. The example of the past is the great incentive to the future. An honest, true-minded, and patriotic President, who eschews all party ties, and makes integrity and patriotism the leading principle of his conduct,
