THE DARLY BEE. MONDAY MORNING, JANUARY 31. THE PROGRESS OF CORRUPTION There is a universal complaint of the oor uption and vocality which pervade the en iption and vensitity which pervade the en-re body politio. Public virtue has become rare, that men have almost ceased to be-pre in its sintance. Office seems designed or nothing size but the reward of the vitest tritian service. The incentives to political tion are no longer based on the highest and

It was not thus in the purer days of the nublic-during that period which, though It was not thus in the pure rays or republic—during that period which, though hardly two generations old, has almost become a targetton of the distant part. In those days is politician and a patriot were nearly synonimous terms. The legislator regarded the wesl of the commonwealth in all the ness, and endeavored to employ his wisdom and his experience solely in bahalf of this country. Office was the guerdon of this country. wiedom and his experience starty in the country. Office was the guerdon of merit, not the meed for successful derangoguism and low intrigue. Ability and fidelity were substantial claims to political favor, and suffrage was ageoused with discrimination and disinterestudeness. The country was axempt from the political fine country was appropring for the country was a properly form the political fine country was a properly officials. The chicks of the tyrant, "Caucus," were unknown. Mais

A false and flightious idea prevails that all is fair in politics, from which the corollary necessarily flows that private integrity and public tarplitude are perfectly compatible. upprincipled legislator. The Con-who would accept a bribe in his any act of equal arrows in a recording acceptant to avoid the penalty of the law or of public reproducion. There is no shadowy and subtle distinction between political and private systems of abloss. Fraud cannot be transmuted into justice; vanilty cannot assume the garb of integrity; svil cannot be made to wear the aspect of good, accordingly as they are practiced by the office-holder, or the simple citizen of a community. The nature of the man and the principles which actuats him are as theroughly developed in one capacity as in the other, and the positician who shows himself a rouge in grain, is deterred from committing similar officeses in private life special selection.

elvely by external and acceptance in traints.

It is evident that when unscrupulous men seek political sevation, they will not boggle at the means requisite for the attainment of their object. The motive being base all else is base that contributes to its gratification. This will explain the wholesale bribery and corruption practiced at elections, the double and treble voting, the attempts by ruffians to brawl at and overare homest clizzas, and such other evil deeds as render the right of suffrage a mere mockery, and the purity of the build-box a jest. No wonder that they who love truth and honor shrink from the element to control these lawless elements, control these lawless elements from the field of politics erous charnel house. No we a pestiferous charner-nouse-that high-toned and conscientious men as esdowed with rare moral courage at esdowed with rare moral courage gentlemen cannot condescend

The ellivation of bad mess to piaces mational importance must necessarily produce imperfect legislation. Imbeditity and dishonesty eugender their own paculiar fraits. They impress themselves on the political tone of the people, debase and demoralize it, and lower its standard to the very mire beneath our feet. What else can be expected from the triumph of infamy, corruptive and incapacity, save ignorance, immurally and lawlessmess—the expedient aubstitute for the right, the extinction of all corruptive and incapacity, save ignorance immorally and lawlessmess—the expedient aubstitute for the right, the extinction of all noble and patriotic impulses, and the prevailence in lour councie and our sets of principles at variance with the aternal canons of justice and truth? To this complexion we are rapidly tending, and unless there become analytic right in the people, some hidden recuperative energy which will deal to serious disturbances the prince of the abolitionists, which is the complexion we make a principle of the abolitionist with the complexion we make a principle of the abolitionist with the complexion we make a principle of the abolitionist with the complexion of the world will be a manual of our republic, and chase a pay the foul and pestilent humors which are polluting our very life blood, the food dreams of the world will be accessed by the melancholy conviction that the best of the world, will be succeeded by the melancholy conviction that
