OFFICE, 83 CHARTRES ST.

THE DAILY BEE. WEDNESDAY MORNING, DEC. 1.

Winter is fairly upon us, and from the premonitory symptoms it is reasonable to conclude that the season will be a hard ose. Those even who are in the enjoyment of a comfortable income look with some degree of misgiving to the advent of the cold season, as they know it will require a large additional expenditure. How then must it be with the poor—the very poor whose "looped and windowed ragedness" is pierced to the marrow by every chill blast, and who must bide the bitter frost in cheerless, comfortless penury! The right thinking journalist, especially in large cities, is irresistibly reminded of the suffering and privation findental to a large proportion of God's creatures at each return of a season which to others presents opportunities of reaping a rich harvest, and of garnering abundant wealth.

New Orleans has, from various causes, of the kind is seldem insupportable; usually, labor is pientiful, and its earnings such as, without wastefulness, will ensure a living to honest industry. The foreign immigation to our purit is comparatively far below that of New Y-rk, and hence there are fewer cases amongst us of abject and utter poverty and destitution. Still, however, there are somequite enough to arouse the active sympathies of the kind hearted and charitable, and to impress upon every one the accessity of contributing within his means to their relief. We are certain, too, that the sagregate amount the suggestion.

New Orleans who are heartily ashamed to beg, and would gladly eat a meal won by their hard and honest toil. Thomasada of our business men meet with such applicants during the writer. Gives them an opportunity, let them sweep the store, or help to unpack goods, or carry a land of costs, or perform any other occupation that quick-writed benevolence may devise for them. The man who detests the vagrant and degraded life of a beggar will feel binestifelevated in his own esteem by remumerated latter; while the imposter will sneak away and exhibit at one the holl-writes of his coam to observe. We throw out the bints at what we conceive to be the filling moment. Our platiceive to be the fitting moment. Our planduty is to love the neighbor, and this teached us to help the poor. But the more comprebut to give wisely is much more the worldly man, who is wrapped a hat though the Lomely proverb tells us

Senator Davis Defining his Position.

Senator Davis speeches, last summer, in Maine, led many persons to believe that he was getting over his fire-eating notions, and was becoming a moderate, practicable politician, looking to the general interests of the Union rather than entertaining the sectional views which had previously marked his public course. The recent elections, and Senator Seward's late aggressive speech, have turned the current of his thoughts back into their old channel, and he is now as ultra as ever. On his return to Mississippi he was invited to address the members of the legislature. In this speech Mr. Davis deciared that, though a State Rights Democraty he was no disministable but desired the perpetuity of the suion of the States. Its dismemberment would be a great coll, but the "entity quanton of this government of the legislature would be a great with but the "entity quanton of the government of the legislature would he as greater of the legislature would have the majority would have the majority would have the majority men and the legislature would have the majority would have the majority men and the legislature.
