GROUNDLESS EXPECTATION.

That the border States should be sincerely desirous to preserve the Union is perfectly natural and reasonable. Their position is somewhat different from that of the extreme South, nor do their interests so completely isolate them from the North. The institution of slavery which they hold in common with its cotemporaries, however, a figurehead by which they are attacked in the South, and which they possess as means of arresting, in case of a collision between the North and South the border States would be necessarily exposed to the brunt of the conflict, and would probably suffer most. These and other considerations serve sufficiently to explain the earnest and unceasing efforts of the border States to preserve the Union. In this hope they imbraced the project of a Peace Congress, believing that the deliberations of such an assemblage might result in some substantial scheme of compromise which would satisfy both sections, and re-establish the Union.

The more reflecting portion of the people anticipated no such marvelous consequences. First, it was doubtful whether the Peace Congress, composed as it was of almost as many delegates from the North as from the South, could agree in framing any plan of compromise. What would content the South might seem too marked a concession by the North. What the latter would approve might fall far short of the demands of the former. But if these obstacles were overcome, there remained the more formidable barrier of Congressional opposition to surrender. Any scheme of compromise involving amendments to the Constitution must needs receive the same ...tion of two-thirds of the members of the United States Congress ere it can be proposed to the State Legislatures. The process itself is complicated and tedious, and in the existing condition of Congress, and condition of public sentiment, may be regarded as surrounded with difficulties, if not utterly impracticable. Thus far the proceedings of the Peace Congress have failed altogether to justify the sanguine anticipations of those who were foremost in organizing that body. In the tallest much and accomplished little. There has been from the start a marked divergence of opinion between the Northern and Southern representatives, which all the professed patriotism and to some ...of the Union have been unable completely to reconcile. The proposition which appears to have found most favor is that presented by Mr. Guthrie and published in our columns a few days ago. It embodies substantially the leading features of the Crittenden compromise, with some of the more ...Southern points of the latter stricken out. Yet if this should be adopted, it will prevail, as we learn by a late majority.

It is certain that no plan of settlement is likely to receive the sanction of the Black Republicans in Congress unless it comes recommended by the three Great Northern delegates to the Peace Congress. From the tone of several ...Republican sheets, we are not ...that whatever may be the action of the Conference, it will not be endorsed by Congress. The ...passage from an article on the subject in a Cincinnati paper are but the echo of the opinions expressed by journals of that ...

All the latter postulates are that no general ...can be readily be reached by the Peace Conference in support of any plan of adjustment. We cannot unanimously the resolutions adopted ...the late ...which must be at least ...against a strong minority, including both ...tenancy, could obtain the hearty consent of Congress and the people.

University of Louisiana.

We have received from T. G. Hunt, Esq., a copy of the Annual Report of the Administrators of the University of Louisiana. In this document a regret is expressed that the provision for the establishment of an University was not accompanied by an order from the Legislature to provide for its support by general taxation, as in the case of the public schools. The aid afforded to the University thus far has been limited exclusively to the Medical Department. The policy of creating two additional faculties, viz: one of letters and one of natural sciences, is recommended to the Legislature. We copy the following in reference to the medical department:

The branch of the medical department allows that the college is pursuing its career of steady progress. The number of matriculates for this year is within four hundred, and there is a fair prospect for its increase in the future. The faculty rejoices that the institution has now become known as a permanent one, ordained to what is and to last for all time to come. Accordingly, what was needed to complete the edifice, in the second general dispensation of the faculty, was a dissecting room. Its want was felt more frequently and severely each session. The class ...ers were put into the attic and the students and their ...ors of the field adjacent to the ...ge. ...ent, goblets, labels, ...ements, and the feeling had left to contend in the ...ation of the matter here, unless it ...ence in our medical ...ty.
