YANKEE ARRIVALS AND DEBUTS.

The Yankees are gradually resuming their accustomed military strength. They [illegible] arrivals in the course of a few months had increased from some sixty vessels to twelve thousand [illegible] Their stock in army of considerably over half a million of men—a host larger than [illegible] Napoleon led into the field to conquer Europe. It is rather an acknowledged mark of braggadocio [illegible] to their own way, but not expected to not [illegible] the Yankees have been in the habit of [illegible] men. In character is nothing [illegible] and it is the more useless from its very [illegible] It is not arrived at early [illegible] the Yankees have been in the habit [illegible] in the effort of adding to its size, without [illegible] the smallest degree adding to its efficiency. It is at the very turning point. It can neither hurt [illegible] nor help itself. Those who [illegible] the [illegible] purpose of governing so large an army as [illegible] calls for a number. The idea of finding a Yankee capable of making it move is preposterous. Such is the fact. Where is the [illegible] to be found? Where? Why, where [illegible] Yankees have won two victories, and lost twenty beating. Their decks are [illegible] with [illegible] the Southern ports, and while they [illegible] the coast, and bombard imperfectly defended harbors, the soldiers dare not advance beyond the protection of their heavy guns. The fault is the Federal army—masses of Yankees [illegible] them about crowded and unintelligent mob. It is well described by the Richmond Dispatch as resembling the hordes with which the Scythian barbarians, breaking from their homes in Central Asia, turned forth periodically during the Middle ages to decimate the fairer portion of the old Roman world; days that [illegible] to-day!

The Yankees resemble the mighty armies with which Asiatic and Northern [illegible] overran [illegible] half the world in every [illegible] century while they are unequaled in their [illegible] numbers, they are unfitted in their [illegible] for any permanent [illegible] They are not [illegible] by discipline [illegible] they are thoroughly [illegible] in all their [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
