Our Correspondence.

Our correspondence of the Associated Press and other letters containing the fullest policy of [illegible] we ought in order to prevent [illegible] the subject. A great deal of [illegible] and has been written and spoken in reference to this subject, and it is perhaps about [illegible] the people to organize them. There is a part of [illegible] about that we should inflict terrible suffering upon the Yankees by turning those cities which he is preparing to capture. The policy is foundation for military and exceptional fact of the conflagration of Moscow, under circumstances altogether different from any that can present themselves in our country. Moscow was given up to the flames, because it had been selected by the supreme Napoleon and her fame was consecrated by the whole universe of [illegible] and the [illegible] had then overcome [illegible] shelter in the [illegible] retreat of the terrible [illegible] of a Russian winter, and drive [illegible] gigantic [illegible] Moscow, which [illegible] the [illegible] of the Russian Empire from subjugation.

Not the slightest parallel could possibly exist between that memorable deed and any resolution which would [illegible] to the Nation's Southern city. We [illegible] that in destroying our property by which to [illegible] necessity. With the Public we [illegible] duty to understand why cotton and tobacco should be burned, and why it is for them to cherish our deadliest enemies; whether that under all circumstances we are bound to [illegible] the [illegible] of the Government, we ought in order to prevent [illegible] the [illegible] of the country
