NEW ORLEANS, TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 18, 1862.

Vol. XVII—New Series, Vol XXXVI—Whole No. 12,501.

1862-73 Chartres street.

NEW ORLEANS,
TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 18, 1862.

The U. S. Mail steamer Potomac Captain Fischer, leaves her wharf at 8 o'clock this morning for New York, with $120,000 in gold, a large sum of bank notes, and the following passengers:

Mr. A. H. Beloit and wife, Miss Davis, Mr. M. S. Myrick and wife, Dr. J. C. K. Knobell, Mrs. Harriet, L. S. Sherrill, G. H. Smith, Dr. W. L. Lovett, Miss Weston, Miss Walker, Mr. T. J. Higgins, W. F. T. T. and others.

Mr. T. Montgomery tells this day as follows:

At 10 o'clock, at port 40, Second District, a large lot of canes and sugar, largely supplied by watermen, were loaded on board the steamer. At 11 o'clock, 40, Third District, 111 bales hay. Also at 11 o'clock, at 87 Camp street, old Auction Mart, a good assortment of farm and other goods. The advertisements:

Particulars of the Surrender of New Orleans.

The following particulars of the surrenders of places, &c., made available for our columns, are given by the London Advertiser:

At last we have positive information that our troops have been surrendered to the rebels at the gates of New Orleans. The capitulation of the Thirty-third Kentucky Regt. took place in this city, but over night left Mobile, and was sent to New Orleans. The rebels told us that about the time when we first fought you were with the people?

Not in the least. I missed you after General Lee's proclamation was issued. Then I took it all in part, and replied to you as follows:

Q. What is the number of the rebels?

A. It would be impossible to say.

Q. How many men are there?

A. There are more than 70,000 men, though they have not yet been counted.

This caused him to avoid discussion, so he said nothing more. The regular steamers of New Orleans, however, were soon to be captured, so he had to leave the city.

He had to leave the city, so he went to Mobile, where he was captured by the rebels.

They had sold everything, and had been compelled to sell their horses. They were ordered to open their stores by their officers.

Mr. A. J. Dabney, located near the New Orleans Stockade, had a large stock of books and papers, and offered to sell them to the rebels.

He was captured, and, after the surrender, was paroled. The rebels were engaged in preparing the Federal prisoners.

The commander was a man of character, & easily, as the gallant little band of Federal troops who had so nobly defended the city, and died on Tuesday, were captured by an overwhelming force. It will be remarkable to see the number of rebels who have been formed with a view to an attack from the South; but, as a fact, no such attack has been made, as the Federal works were threatened on all sides, and have been overthrown on the part of the rebels.

Our forces were surrounded by U. S. troops, who were compelled to march on Monday morning.

The rebels immediately embraced the severest measures to prevent the safety of the city.

At 10 o'clock, General W. F. Fulkerson, the commander of the rebels, issued a general order to all the regiments, and the Prevent Guard, to march to the gates of New Orleans, and to be ready to repel any attack.

General Fulkerson, in his address to the men, said:

"We are now, my dear soldiers, in command of the Union forces.
