

73 CHARTRES STREET.

ELLIGENCE.

Decision in Admiralty.
We find in a Circular paper the following report of a late decision by Judge Dorell, of the U. S. District Court, interesting to steamboat men and persons connected with them. In the case of Antonio E. Prevost vs. the steamer "The American," owned by the "The American Line," the following points were decided: That a vessel which has been chartered to transport passengers and cargo is not a common carrier, and is not liable for the loss of cargo in the event of fire on board. The vessel in this case was chartered for the purpose of transporting passengers and cargo, and was not a common carrier. The cargo was lost by fire on board the vessel. The court held that the vessel was not liable for the loss of the cargo.
