A LOST OPPORTUNITY.

Of all the nominations for Senator of the United States on Tuesday last, it is generally conceded that Gen. Weitz, the successful candidate, was the least objectionable. No one expected that any Democrat or anti-Republican would, the slightest chance of being chosen by the General Assembly constituted as it is. The Republicans in that body number one hundred and eleven, (111) and the Democrats or anti-Republicans number 88. From these figures, it is manifest that the only choice the minority had, was either to abstain from voting, altogether or to vote for their nominee of the majority party who should seem to them best fitted for the high position. The general opinion in that the minority had it in their power to obtain from the majority, divided as the latter was into two hostile factions, some equivalent for the benefits of their constituency, in return for their votes for Gen. Weitz. That gentleman was the candidate of Gov. Warmoth, without whose support he could not have been nominated, much less elected. It must then have been important to Gov. Warmoth that Gen. Weitz should be chosen; and that result could have been procured by the co-operation of the Democrats with the Dean faction, who together numbered eighty-six votes to sixty-six of the enemy for six hours. Losses considerable on both sides.
