Universal Military Training League.

1322 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago Howard H. Gross, President.

General George W. Goethals, builder of the Panama Canal, in the New York World of January 18, 1917, said:

"The Chamberlain bill is the most moderate, the most reasonable plan of national training ever devised. One great thing about it is that it is a distinctively American plan. It is not an adaptation of the Australian act, nor is it the Swiss or Argentine systems remodeled to fit the United States. It is a good, straight, thoroughly practical plan worked out by Americans for Americans and made to fit American needs. It is so simple that a child can understand it, and it is so fair that no American who loves his country and is willing to serve it in times of need can state a reasonable objection to it. Every man owes a duty to his country which he should pay in part by personal service, and it is only fair to him that his country should so train him that if ever an emergency arises and he is called upon to serve he may do so in the most efficient manner and with the least personal risk. That is why I am in favor of the proposal for universal military training. This war has demonstrated one thing above all others: You cannot take men from the streets and push them into battle. It would mean nothing short of murder; so we must have military training and such training must be universal. Equality is the very life breath of democracy. Equality is the cardinal principle of our republic, and whatever duty one man owes is owed by all men alike; whatever steps are taken to train our citizens for self-defense must apply to all—to the rich and the poor, to the learned and the ignorant, to the country boy and the town lad; all must have an equal chance. Such training will raise the moral and physical tone of the nation; it will develop the individual; it will create a sense of duty and responsibility; it will instill respect for lawful authority and give birth to a feeling of nationalism instead of sectionalism. Finally, training the son of the millionaire alongside the son of the laborer will make democracy a living thing." (To Be Continued.)
